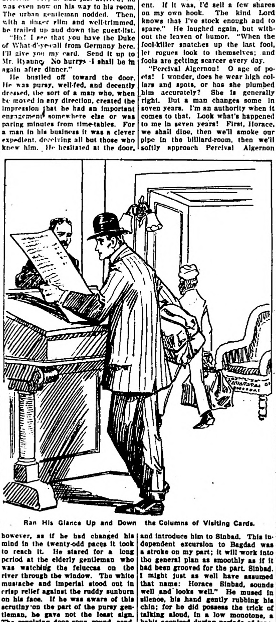
Here he was saved from further cerebral agony by a timely interruption. A man, who was not of bucolic persuasion either in dress or speech, urban from the tips of his bleached fingers to the bulb of his bibulous nose, leaned across the counter and asked if Mr. Horace Ryanne had yet arrived. Yes, he had just arrived; he was even now on his way to his room. The urban gentleman nodded. Then, with a finger slim and well-trimmed, he trailed up and down the guest-list.

"Ha! I see that you have the Duke of What-d'-ye-call from Germany here. I'll give you my card. Send it up to Mr. Ryanne. No hurry. I shall be in again after dinner."

He bustled off toward the door. He was pursy, well-fed, and decently dressed, the sort of a man who, when he moved in any direction, created the impression that he had an important engagement somewhere else or was paring minutes from time-tables. For a man in his business it was a clever expedient, deceiving all but those who knew him. He hesitated at the door, however, as if he had changed his mind in the twenty-odd paces it took to reach it. He stared for a long period at the elderly gentleman who was watching the feluccas on the river through the window. The white mustache and imperial stood out in crisp relief against the ruddy sunburn on his face. If he was aware of this scrutiny on the part of the pursy gentleman, he gave not the least sign. The revolving door spun round, sending a puff of outdoor air into the lounging-room. The elderly gentleman then smiled, and applied his thumb and forefinger to the waxen point of his imperial.



Ran His Glance Up and Down the Columns of Visiting Cards.

In the intervening time Mr. Ryanne entered his room, threw the bundle on the bed, sat down beside it, and read his letter. Shadows and lights moved across his face; frowns that hardened it, smiles that mellowed it. Women hold the trick of writing letters. Do they hate, their thoughts flash and burn from line to line. Do they love, 'tis lettered music. Do they conspire, the breadth of their imagination is without horizon. At best, man can indite only a polite business letter, his love-notes were adjudged long since a maudlin collection of loose sentences. In this letter Mr. Ryanne found the three parts of life.

"She's a good general; but hang these brimstone efforts of hers. She talks too much of heart. For my part, I prefer to regard it as a mere physical function, a pump, a motor, a power that gives action to the legs, either in coming or in going, more especially in going." He laughed. "Well, hers is the inspiration and hers is the law. And to think that she could plan all this on the spur of the moment, down to the minutest detail! It's a science." He put the letter away, slid out his legs and glared at the dusty tips of his shoes. "The United Romance and Adventure Company, Ltd., of New York, London, and Paris. She has the greatest gift of all, the sense of humor."

He rose and opened his kit-bag doubtfully. He rummaged about in the depths and at last straightened up with a mild oath.

"Not a pair of cuffs in the whole outfit, not a shirt, not a collar. Oh, well, when a man has to leave Bagdad the way I did, over the back fence, so to speak, linen doesn't count."

He drew down his cuffs, detached and reversed them, he turned his folding collar wrong-side out, and used the under side of the foot-rug as a shoe-polisher. It was the ingenious procedure of a man who was used to being out late nights, who made all things answer all purposes. This rapid and singularly careless toilet completed, he centered his concern upon the more vital matter of finances. He was close to the nadir: four sovereigns, a florin, and a collection of battered coppers that would have tickled the pulse of an amateur numismatist.

"No vintage to-night, my boy; no long, fat Havana, either. A bottle of stout and a few rags of plug-cut; that's the pace we'll travel this evening. The United Romance and Adventure Company is not listed at present. If it was, I'd sell a few shares on my own hook. The kind Lord knows that I've stock enough and to spare." He laughed again, but without the leaven of humor. "When the fool-killer snatches up the last fool, let rogues look to themselves; and fools are getting scarcer every day.

"Percival Algernon! O age of poets! I wonder, does he wear high collars and spats, or has she plumbed him accurately? She is generally right. But a man changes some in seven years. I'm an authority when it comes to that. Look what's happened to me in seven years! First, Horace, we shall dine, then we'll smoke our pipe in the billiard-room, then we'll softly approach Percival Algernon and introduce him to Sinbad. This independent excursion to Bagdad was a stroke on my part; it will work into the general plan as smoothly as if it had been grooved for the part. Sinbad. I might just as well have assumed that name: Horace Sinbad, sounds well and looks well." He mused in silence, his hand gently rubbing his chin; for he did possess the trick of talking aloud, in a low monotone, a habit acquired during periods of loneliness, when the sound of his own voice had succeeded in steadying his tottering mind.

What a woman, what a wife, she would have been to the right man! Odd thing, a man can do almost anything but direct his affections; they must be drawn. She was not for him; nay, not even on a desert isle. Doubtless he was a fool. In time she would have made him a rich man. Alack! It was always the one we pursued that we loved and never the one that pursued us.

"I'm afraid of her; and there you are. There isn't a man living who has gone back of that Mona Lisa smile of hers. If she was the last woman and I was the last man, I don't say."

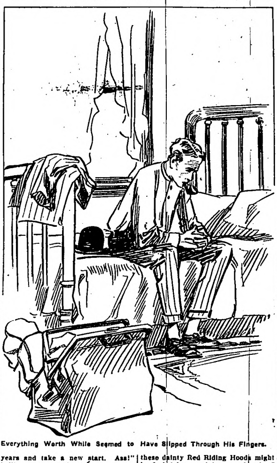
He hunted for a cigarette, but failed to find one. "Almost at the bottom, boy; the winter of our discontent, and no sun of York to make it glorious. Twenty-four hundred at cards, and to lose it like a tyro! Wallace has taught me all he knows, but I'm a booby. Twenty-four hundred; firm's money. It's a failing of mine, the firm's money. But, damn it all, I can't cheat a man at cards; I'd rather cut his throat."

He found his pipe and a careful search of the corners of his coat-pockets revealed a meager pipeful of tobacco. He picked out the little balls of wool, the ground-coffee, the cloves, and pushed the charge home into the crusted bowl of his briar.

"To the devil with economy! A pint of burgundy and a perfecto if they hale us to jail for it. I'm dead tired. I've seen three corners in hell in the past two months. I'm going as far as four sovereigns will take me. . . . Fortune Chedsoye." His blue eyes became less hard and his mouth less defiant. "I repeat, the heart should be nothing but a pump. Otherwise it gets in the way, becomes an obstruction, a bottomless pit. Will-power, that's the ticket. I can face a lion without an extra beat, I can face the various countenances of death without an additional flutter; and yet, here's a girl who, when I see her or think of her, sends the pulse soaring from seventy-seven up to eighty-four. Bad business; besides, it's so infernally unfashionable. It's hard work for a man to keep his balance 'twixt the devil and the deep, blue sea; Gioconda on one side and Fortune on the other. Gioconda throws open windows and doors at my approach; but Fortune locks and bars hers, nor knocks at mine. That's the way it always goes.

"If a man could only go back ten years and take a new start. Ass!" balling his fist at the reflection in the mirror. "Snivel and whine over the bed of your own making. You had your opportunity, but you listened to the popping of champagne-corks, the mutter of cards, the inane drivel of chorus-ladies. You had a decent college record, too. Bah! What a guileless fool you were! You ran on, didn't you, till you found your neck in the loop at the end of the rope? And perhaps that soft-footed, estimable brother of yours didn't yank it taut as a hangman's? You heard the codicil; into one ear and out the other. Even then you had your chance; patience for two short years, and a million. No, a thousand times no. You know what you were about, empty-headed fool! And today, two pennies for a dead man's eyes."

He dropped his fist dejectedly. Where had the first step begun? And where would be the last? In some drab corner, possibly; drink, morphine, or starvation; he'd never have the courage to finish it with a bullet. He was terribly bitter. Everything worth while seemed to have slipped through his fingers, his pleasure-loving fingers.



Everything Worth While Seemed to Have Slipped Through His Fingers.

"Come, come, Horace; buck up. Still the ruby kindles in the vine. No turning back now. We'll go on till we come bang! against the wall. There may be some good bouts between here and there. I wonder what Gioconda would say if she knew why I was so eager for this game?"

He went down to dinner, and they gave him a table in an obscure corner, as a subtle reminder that his style was passe. He didn't care; he was hungry and thirsty. He could see nearly every one, even if only a few could see him. This was somewhat to his vantage. He endeavored to pick out Percival Algernon; but there were too many high collars, too many monocles. So he contented himself with a mild philosophical observance of the scene. The murmur of voices, rising as the wail of the violins sank, sinking as the wail rose; the tinkle of glass and china, the silver and linen, the pretty women in their rustling gowns, the delicate perfumes, the flash of an arm, the glint of a polished shoulder; this was the essence of life he coveted. He smiled at the thought and the sure knowledge that he was not the only wolf in the fold. Ay, and who among these dainty Red Riding Hoods might be fooled by a vulpine grandmother? Truth, when a fellow winnowed it all down to a handful, there were only fools and rogues. If one was a fool, the rogue got you, and he in turn devoured himself.

He held his glass toward the table-lamp, moved it slowly to and fro under his nose, epicureanly; then he sipped the wine. Something like! It ran across his tongue and down his throat in tingling fire, nectarious; and he went half way to Olympus, to the feet of the gods. For weeks he had lived in the vilest haunts, in desperate straits, his life in his open hands; and now once more he had crawled from the depths to the outer crust of the world. It did not matter that he was destined to go down into the depths again; so long as the spark burned he was going to crawl back each time. Damnable luck! He could have lived like a prince. Twenty-four hundred, and all in two nights, a steady stream of gold into the pockets of men whom he could have cheated with consummate ease, and didn't. A fine wolf, whose predatory instincts were still riveted to that obsolete thing called conscience!

"Conscience? Rot! Let us for once be frank and write it down as caution, as fear of publicity, anything but the white guardian-angel of the immortality of the soul. Heap up the gold, Apollyon; heap it up, higher and higher, till not a squeak of that still small voice that once awoke the chap in the Old Testament can ever again be heard. Now, no more retrospection, Horace; no more analysis; the vital question simmers down to this: If Percival Algernon balks, how far will four sovereigns go?"

CHAPTER III.

The Holy Yhlordes.

George drank his burgundy perfunctorily. Had it been astringent as the native wine of Corsica, he would not have noticed it. The little nerves that ran from his tongue to his brain had temporarily lost the power of communication. And all because of the girl across the way. He couldn't keep his eyes from wandering in her direction. She faced him diagonally. She ate but little, and when the elderly gentleman poured out for her a glass of sauterne, she motioned it aside, rested her chin upon her folded hands, and stared not at but through her vis-a-vis.

It was a lovely head, topped with coils of lustrous, light brown hair; an oval face, of white and rose and ivory tones; scarlet lips, a small, regular nose, and a chin the soft roundness of which hid the resolute lift to it. To these attributes of loveliness was added a perfect form, the long, flowing curves of youth, not the abrupt contours of maturity. George couldn't recollect when he had been so impressed by a face. From the moment she had stepped down from the carriage, his interest had been drawn, and had grown to such dimensions that when he entered the dining-room his glance immediately searched for her table. What luck in finding her across the way! He questioned if he had ever seen her before. There was something familiar; the delicate profile stirred some sleeping memory but did not wake it.

How to meet her, and when he did meet her, how to interest her? If she would only drop her handkerchief, her purse, something to give him an excuse, an opening. Ah, he was certain that this time the hydra-headed one should not overcome him. To gain her attention and to hold it, he would have faced a lion, a tiger, a wild-elephant. To diagnose these symptoms might not be fair to George. "Love at first sight" reads well and sounds well, but we hoary-headed philosophers know that the phrase is only poetical license.

Once, and only once, she looked in his direction. It swept over him with the chill of a winter wind that he meant as much to her as a tree, a fence, a meadow, as seen from the window of a speeding railway train. But this observation, transient as it was, left with him the indelible impression that her eyes were the saddest he had ever seen. Why? Why should a young and beautiful girl have eyes like that? It could not mean physical weariness, else the face would in some way have expressed it. The elderly man appeared to do his best to animate her; he was kindly and courteous and by the gentle way he laughed at intervals was trying to bolster up the situation with a jest or two. The girl never so much as smiled, or shrugged her shoulders; she was as responsive to these overtures as marble would have been.

Try Giving Joy to Others

Shedding of Sunshine Will Be Found to Have Good Effect on Those Who Practice It.

It was Mr. Barrie who quaintly said: "Women who bring sunshine into the lief of others cannot keep it from themselves."

That is a recipe to learn and apply. If you will not try to be a spreader of joy for the joy it gives do so from selfish motives.

Girls may think this farfetched. Their one thought is to snatch at joy for themselves. It takes experience, perhaps bitter experience, to learn that the joy that counts most is the one with a rebound. Like a rubber ball, the harder you throw it the quicker it returns.

The girl who starts on a joy quest for herself cannot say: "I'll be nice to poor Maria, she has had such a stupid time," and then go about her sunshine shedding with patronizing airs. She may give joy, but the chances are that her patronage will be felt and resented. The sunshine that counts glows in the heart and must come out.

One need not go into sunshine societies to bask in the rays of joy giving. Nor need that sunshine be for outsiders. Sunshine-shedding, like charity, can profitably begin at home. It is not so exciting, perhaps, to try to brighten the lives of mother or small brother or sister as it is to be a Lady Bountiful, but the reflex action is quite as strong.

Try shedding sunshine wherever you are. Do not let a day pass without doing some little thing to brighten that day for some one else, and you will find your day more joyful.

Mystery of Love.

If a man should importune me to give a reason why I loved him I find it could no otherwise be expressed than by making answer, because it was he; because it was I. There is beyond all that I am able to say, I know not what inexplicable and fated power that brought on this union.—Montaigne.

Surprise Boxes in Shark Stomachs.

Fishermen in the Caribbean sea recently found in the stomach of a shark which they had killed a good sized bottle in which was a half-decipherable letter from a shipwrecked sailor. Many such relics have been found. In one case a lady's bracelet was found in a state of perfect preservation, together with a silver spoon and a thousand Spanish reals in money. The curious feature of the finding of the money was that it was in an official receptacle lost in the city of Spanish Town (Jamaica) during a negro uprising in the seventeenth century. Where had it been meantime? Surely not in the shark's stomach, unless the shark lives a much longer time (or some of them) than science has any reason to suppose possible. On the other hand, if in the sea it would have been rendered unrecognizable in a few weeks. Had it been in the possession of some one shipwrecked, why had it been left intact? The conclusion was inevitable that the shark must have fished it out from a compartment of some long-submerged vessel.—Harper's Weekly.

REGULATING THE STOMACH

That Important Organ Works According to the Quality of the Blood That Is Furnished to It.

There is the most intimate relation between the condition of the blood and the activity of the stomach. The blood depends upon the stomach for a large part of its nourishment; while every act of digestion, from the time the food enters the stomach until it is digested and assimilated by the blood, needs plenty of pure, well-oxidized blood. The stomach works only according to the quality of the blood.

The most common cause of indigestion is anæmia, or lack of blood. Indeed there is not a single disturbance of the health of the body nor any form of exhaustion or lowered vitality, that may not lead to stomach trouble. Disordered blood is the one common cause of indigestion. Thin, impure blood weakens the muscles of the stomach and lessens the product of the glands which furnish the digestive fluids.

Nothing will more promptly cure indigestion than plenty of pure, well-oxidized blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People increase the red corpuscles, the oxygen-carriers of the blood, until the blood is rich and red. A thorough trial of these pills gives a hearty appetite, perfect digestion, strength and health.

Mrs. Emma M. Mayne, of No. 635 Second avenue, Clinton, Iowa, says: "I had just worked myself out bringing up a family of five children and, while in this run-down condition, I took sick with some kind of stomach trouble. I doctored with several physicians and saw a specialist in Chicago but received little help. I could not eat anything with relish and could not sleep. I would have deathly sick spells and would vomit. I had terrible headaches and dizzy spells. I got very thin and my friends thought I was going into consumption. I doctored for a year or so without help. While visiting a niece she told me that she took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, so I tried them. They soon helped me and a few boxes entirely cured me."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50c. per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Paid Minister in Tinfoil.

The meanest man in the world has been found. He is the man who gave the Rev. Thilo Gore, pastor of the German Lutheran church, an envelope filled with tinfoil for marrying him.

The bride and groom rang Dr. Gore's doorbell late one night and asked him to marry them. As they had a license he did so. After the ceremony was performed the groom handed the minister an envelope which he supposed to contain the fee. He found it contained nothing but several pieces of tinfoil.—Chicago Tribune.

Scotch Query.

A bluff, consequential gentleman from the south, with more beef on his bones than brain in his head, riding along the Hamilton road, near to Blantyre, asked a herdboy on the roadside, in a tone and manner evidently meant to quiz, if he were "halfway to Hamilton?" "Man," replied the boy, "I wad need to ken whar ye hae come frae, afore I could answer your question."—Exchange.

If a newly wedded man has no secrets from his wife it is rather hard on the other women he might have married, but didn't.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent, St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald.

The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Saturday, November 16, 1912.

Congressman Steenerson was an easy winner for reelection.

The Spectator is under obligations to The News-Press for the corrected figures of the election in Pennington county.

The report that the republican bosses stole a presidency at Chicago is indignantly denied. It was only a nomination that they stole.—Hibbing Tribune.

Although the socialists made no great advances in the capturing of offices in Minnesota this year, they showed a tremendous increase in their vote. In twelve counties of the state Debs was given a greater vote than was Taft.

The campaign is over. But this is just the time when Mr. Common People does NOT want to lose interest in public affairs. Now is the time to begin to watch the chaps who were elected—from president down to dog catcher—to see that they do what they promised to do.—Luverne Journal.

Rural School Notes

Your county superintendent has visited during the last month schools in Silverton, Highlanding, Kratka, Smiley, part of Rocksbury, St. Hilaire, Black River, Polk Centre, Bray, and Sanders. The teachers are doing excellent work, the attendance is fairly good, and the school houses are in good condition generally. Some of them need banking.

I would urge that the scholars yet absent from school on account of the fall work make it a point to enter school, so as to reap a full benefit of the term's work, and instructors.

Attention of our teachers called to the meeting of the Minnesota State Teachers' association, to meet in St. Paul on Dec. 5 7, and to the state industrial contest and exhibits to be held at the same time and place.

It is suggested that teachers wanting to attend these meetings teach on Friday after Thanksgiving day and take a vacation for the week when these meetings are being held.

I do feel grateful to the electorate of Pennington county for your vote at the recent election. You have retained me to serve a noble cause. With your cooperation I trust to be able to do much for our schools.

Yours sincerely, E. A. MOSTUE.

The Youth's Companion Window Transparency and Calendar for 1913.

The publishers of the Youth's Companion will, as always at this season, present to every subscriber whose subscription ($2.00) is paid for 1913, a beautiful souvenir. This year it takes the unique form of a window transparency, to be hung in the window or in front of a lighted lamp. Through it the light shine as hrough the stained glass of a cathedral window, softly illuminating the design—a figure of Autumn laden with fruits; and all around, wreathed in purple clusters of grapes and green foliage, is the circle of the months. It is the most attractive gift ever sent to Companion readers.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ninety dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due, and is due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by C. E. Carpenter and Ella A. Carpenter, his wife, and Geo. M. Bleecker and Mary F. Bleecker, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of St. Hilaire, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagees, bearing date the 10th day of June, 1910, and duly acknowledged by said mortgagors on June 27th, 1910, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Red Lake and state of Minnesota on the 30th day of June, 1910, at 5 o'clock p. m., in book 37 of mortgages on page 102.

Which said mortgage was after the organization and creation of Pennington county, Minnesota, duly transcribed into the records in the office of the register of deeds of said Pennington county, and recorded therein on the 23rd day of November, 1910, in book 2 of mortgages on page 332;

And Whereas, The said mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of fifteen hundred ninety and no-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum from the 10th day of June, 1912, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: The south one-half of the southeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section two (2) in township one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-four (44) west of the fifth principal meridian, in Red Lake county, Minnesota, now a part of Pennington county, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington county at the east front door of the court house in the city of Thief River Falls in Pennington county in said state on the 30th day of December, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of fifteen hundred ninety dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Artificial Frauds

To please the eye is better than to please any other sense. For many years the grocers have taken tightly packed boxes of strawberries when received from pickers, emptied them out, repacked them loosely, placing the largest berries on top, and making five boxes out of four, get more money for them than they could for the tightly packed boxes. Not content with that, they are now coloring berries with coal tar dye to make them a brilliant red. Several convictions have been had recently on that score. After all, the only people immune from arrest for impurities are makers of beer such as the golden grain belt beer. Alex Thompson, agent, Crookston. adv

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. 830 D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions in banks and offices this year—had calls for over 800. All Fargo banks and 635 others employ D. B. C. pupils as cashiers, tellers, bookkeepers or stenographers. No other school offers such endorsement.

Our $60 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $93 course in Commerce and Banking (endorsed by Bankers' Association) supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the larger concerns. The shorthand course (under two expert reporters) trains court reporters and high grade stenographers. The stenographers for the U. S. District Court, N. D. Supreme Court, Third Judicial District and the Cass Co. Court are D. B. C. graduates. Do other schools offer this PROOF of superior training?

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building (350,000 cubic feet of space), is seated with roll top desks, has 100 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. Our pupils deal with each other and with elegantly equipped offices, using aluminum money. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils like them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C."

Next term begins soon. For booklet, write

America's Greatest Weekly
THE
TOLEDO, OHIO
The Best Known Newspaper in the United States
Circulation 340,090
Popular in Every State

No Whiskey Advertising

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making The Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

The village authorities have secured a practically complete list of delinquent taxes on property in the village. Many of these taxes, on valuable property, too, are for years prior to 1905, and the state gives a clear title to the property on payment of one-half the original taxes. It behooves property owners to be looking out for their titles.

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

G. W. HOOPER

The WILD SHEEP of WESTERN KANSU

By H. FRANK WALLACE

You come by way of Taochow, the new city—a mushroom growth of some six hundred years old—not the old, which lies further to the west. The wall straggles up a hillside and round a sharply rising knoll—a fine natural watch-tower. Two-thirds of the area enclosed is devoted to cultivation, while the town itself, flat roofed and in the case of some houses two-storied, meanders about the lower slopes and is almost entirely inhabited by Thibetan Mahomedans. It is in reality the border town between Thibet and China, though Thibet proper lies thirty miles to the west. A few "li" from the city you cross a low pass, from which it is possible to see the snow-capped heights of the Minshan mountains. They look down on a huddled mass of gradually lowering hills, torn and intersected by green, rushing mountain streams from which radiate an interminable series of birch and fir clad gulies. The Tao river sharply divides this type of country from the low, bare, cultivated slopes where Taochow lies. From the summit of the pass one drops down between narrow grass-covered corries to the little town—if such it can be called—of Choni, within a few hundred yards of the river. Incidentally, one passes from lackadaisical, inert China into an atmosphere of border feuds, mediaeval raids, pine-covered, snow-capped peaks and a wild race of Highlanders. It is a quaint little place, like a pigeon's nest in a cluster of red cliffs, dominated by a lamaseral containing six hundred monks, as dirty and evil-looking as most of their tribe. The capital of the Prince of Choni, it is the only town within his dominions, which extend over a district half as large as Scotland. A half-caste Thibetan, aged twenty-three, he furnishes a very pretty parallel to Rehoboam. His predecessor, who was the eighteenth of his line, a popular and wise old ruler, adopted him. The prince, on his death, turned away the old men who had hitherto helped to govern the forty-eight wild tribes who owned allegiance to their master and substituted his own friends, spending his nights with them in gambling, opium-smoking and other forms of dissipation. He is dependent on China and under the authority of the county official, who in turn is under the provincial governor, who, again, is subject to the viceroy of Shensi and Kansu. This personage resides at Lanchow. When we arrived at the capital, the prince and about two hundred men (he pays no tribute to China, but must supply two thousand irregular cavalry if called upon) were away in the hills fighting the T'e-pu, a wild, aboriginal tribe who infest the country to the south of the Minshan mountains. These interesting people are divided into fourteen clans, and are much dreaded by the Chinese, who only venture through their country once a year. They then organize a big caravan of merchants with guards and get through as quickly as possible. The T'e-pu are very hostile to strangers, and it would probably be as much as one's possessions were worth to venture into their territory alone. A clan protects its own friends and the friends of its chief, but not the friends of another clan, who are looked on as legitimate prey. When they hold a stranger in great affection and reverence, they have a custom of regarding him as their adopted father. As an illustration of their character, the prime minister of the late Prince of Choni, being adopted as father by about forty T'e-pu, went alone among them to retrieve the grandchildren of a Christian convert whom they had kidnapped. All the king's horses and all the king's men were powerless; but this one man, because he was their friend, safely entered their country and returned with the children. They are not agriculturists, but live chiefly by barter, and come into Choni occasionally for provisions. I saw a number of them later on, including a lama who performed a monotonous and somewhat senseless dance for our edification. At times they dash down in a sudden raid, as the Chonians are watering their horses and livestock at the river and whirl them away into the hills before their owners have time to recover from their astonishment. One of their priests was imprisoned by the prince in his yamen. Six of them set out to rescue him, and had the impudence and courage to go and cook their food in the yard of the yamen! So much for the T'e-pu!

DANCE BY T'E-PU LAMA

SOME BORDER TIBETANS ON THE MARCH

We spent some days in Choni, and on September 11th left for the little village of Archuen, thirty miles to the south, where we were the paying guests of one Chishi. He was a keen hunter, a little, thin, wiry man with a pleasant face. The Thibetan houses are far cleaner and more tidily kept than those of the Chinese. We occupied the large family room, which they all contain, and were really very well off. Our hostess, a most masterful lady, who ruled her husband with a rod of iron, had to be warned not to invade the sanctity of our chamber at certain hours, otherwise she and the rest of the village crowded to what they considered a show organized by a beneficent Providence for their especial benefit, in and out of season.

Our object in coming to Archuen was to secure heads of the wild sheep of western Kansu. Dr. J. A. C. Smith, our companion, sent home a specimen which the natives brought him early in 1911; but so far as I am aware it has not hitherto been secured by a white man in this particular part of China. Mr. R. Kingdon Ward has erroneously described it as Ovis Hodgsoni, but this it most certainly is not. A full-grown male stands about three feet at the shoulder and weighs approximately one hundred and fifty pounds. (I give later the measurements of one which I subsequently shot.) The horns are smooth, growing more or less at right angles to the skull and curving upwards and outwards at the tips. The animals are handsomely marked with black on the forelegs, with a white patch on the knee. A black stripe runs up the hind legs to the point of the thigh. The hocks are also black. The chest of the older rams is of a similar color, speckled with white on the neck; the black marking extends between the fore legs. There is a black stripe on the side extending from the point of the thigh to a point short of the elbow. The tip of the tail is black. The general color is gray-brown, though in certain aspects there is a decidedly blue tinge. The muzzle is dark to a line between the eyes, turning to a red-brown tone at the edges where it merges into the general gray tone of the face. Very closely allied to the burhel of India (Ovis natura), I cannot be certain if they are identical. It is difficult to compare the two from photographs, but from the remarks of local hunters it would certainly appear that there are differences particularly in the shape of the horns. After a week's hunting from Archuen we decided to move so as to be closer to our ground. George had got on the track of a herd containing three rams, while I had seen a lot of nine, headed by a single ram with one horn. George located his herd on an extremely steep rocky ridge which thrust itself from a grass slope above the river. The ledges were sprinkled with firs and rhododendrons, which added considerably to the difficulties of the task. He slept out on one occasion beneath a ledge of rock with his hunter, climbed above the sheep, and would certainly have got a shot had not the latter unnecessarily exposed himself at a critical moment and sent the herd careering off: all of which George explained in a short note reminiscent of Mr. Pepys at his best. He never got on terms with them again. I had seen nothing since my first day out, so we moved five or six miles to the east.

The weather was very changeable, and we experienced snow, hail, thunder, rain and mist in disagreeable succession. On September 25th I reached camp just as it was getting dark, to find that the two shots I had heard in the forenoon were the heralds of success, and that George had secured a very pretty head. I had an alternation of good and bad luck, for spying a ram at 7:30, I had my stalk spoiled by three miserable medicine diggers, followed him all day, had four distinct stalks, missed him once, and finally killed him at five o'clock in the evening.

The horns measured 20 inches in length, 12 inches in circumference and 28 inches from tip to tip. This, of course, is small in length for an Indian burhel, but good in other respects. The native hunters declare that the heads in this district never attain to very much greater length, and Dr. Smith tells me that the head which he sent to England was somewhat thicker in circumference, but not so long and much more clumsy in appearance. All of which would seem to prove that his was an older ram, which had worn down the tips of his horn, while my specimen is probably that of a rather younger beast, very nearly, if not quite, in his prime.

He certainly was not at all strong smelling, which is a characteristic of the Indian variety, though George said he noticed a distinct odor from the herd. The native hunters declare that these sheep rut in January and that the lambs are dropped in May. If this is so, the best rams were probably still on higher ground, which we had not time to reach.

The measurements of my specimen are as follows:

	Inches.
Height (allowing for weight when standing)	35
Length (nose to root of tail, straight line)	48
Length (following curve of back)	55
Tail	6
Fore leg (elbow to point of hoof, straight line)	28
Fore leg girth (below knee)	4¼
Fore leg girth (forearm)	9½
Hind leg (point of thigh to point of hoof, straight line)	25¾
Hind leg (from hock to point of hoof)	13½
Girth (cleaned)	42

NAPOLEON RELIC FOUND.

It is reported here, says a Paris correspondent of the New York Times, that at the town of Dorpat, in Russia, there has just been discovered a remarkable relic of Napoleon's Russian campaign in the form of a copy of Goethe's "Werther," which was his personal property and accompanied him wherever he went.

The volume, which is bound in leather and in an excellent state of preservation, contains, as well as Napoleon's signature, a curious inscription on the fly leaf by an unknown hand, stating that the book was stolen by a Cossack from the emperor's sledge one night on the retreat from Moscow.

Besides the date of the theft and the name of the thief, details are given of the method by which the Cossack managed to possess himself of the volume.

Mufflers for Aeroplanes

Recent experiments with a muffling box on board an aeroplane, made near Paris, proved successful. The great noise of the motor ordinarily lessens the comforts in flying and fatigues the pilot as well as causes annoyance to passengers. In military work the noise prevents the officers from hearing sounds which come from the ground, and these would often be a useful factor in observations. Pilots cannot use their voices to any extent. Another point is that were the motor silent running the observers could hear sound signals coming from the ground and could also return signals by using trumpets of different pitch, or sirens, as are used on vessels.

The test took place between a military commission, and during the flight it is said that the noise of the motor was so much reduced as to allow the pilot, Labouret, to speak to the persons on the ground when he was flying at 200 feet.

The muffler box does not overheat, owing to the strong air cooling which it receives. The loss of power is below two per cent, as shown by measurement.

MADE FROM SPINACH

DISHES THAT ARE HEALTHY AND PALATABLE.

Subrics of the Vegetable Are Recommended as an Excellent Preparation—Croustades Also Popular—Served With Butter.

Subrics of Spinach—Chop two pounds of cooked spinach, throw it into hot butter, add salt and pepper to taste and one tablespoonful of flour; let this cook for six or seven minutes, then take it off the fire and add three well-beaten eggs. Mix them with the spinach, and spoonful by spoonful drop them into a saucepan containing a sufficient quantity of melted butter to fry them. Turn the subrics from one side to the other and let them cook for three or four minutes; strain and serve them with a good white sauce.

Croustades of Spinach—Cut some bread into the shape of hearts, and slit them all around, then fry them in hot butter. Arrange the hearts in the form of a rosette. Next cut a round of bread, which slit in the same way, and place it in the center over the points of the hearts. Fry them till they are a golden brown, then cut out the interior, take out all the crumb and fill the space left with cooked spinach.

Spinach with Butter—Take two pounds of freshly picked spinach, wash it well in two or three cold waters, then drain it thoroughly and put it into a clean saucepan with four heaping tablespoonfuls of butter and two tablespoonfuls of flour that have been cooked together but not discolored, cover the saucepan and let the spinach cook in this way till drawn down to a creamy consistency, which will take about twenty minutes, then rub it through a fine sieve and then return it again to the saucepan, add to it three tablespoonfuls of cream, reboil, add a dust of white pepper and a very little salt, dish up and garnish it round with little croutons of fried bread or little pieces of puff paste that are baked a pretty golden color, and serve.

Stuffed Shoulder.

Remove bone or have it taken out where you buy it. Cut off all rind with some of the fat on it, roll about six common crackers very fine, pour enough very hot water to moisten well but not too soft. Pepper and salt to taste and one teaspoon of poultry dressing. Mix well with crackers, wash meat well and dry. Place in pan, put cracker mixture where bone had been, roll up, tie with string to keep in place. If you wish to have fat part on top flour well on top, salt and pepper, add one cup of water in pan, bake until a nice brown. When done take from pan, mix some flour in a little cold water. Thicken gravy on top of stove. You will find it delicious. With the bone you can make a nice pea soup. The rind with fat is put into tin plate in oven until all grease is out, but be sure not to burn it, and you will have a lot of nice lard for cooking, nice for cake or any kind of frying.

Chartreuse of Jelly.

Cut the center of a round sponge cake, leaving the bottom and sides thick enough to hold one quart of jelly. Prepare a lemon, orange, strawberry or coffee jelly. When it is cold, just ready to form, turn into the cake and set aside to cool. When ready to serve cover with whipped cream, sweetened and flavored. Do you add whites of eggs to gelatine when beginning to harden? Let cool. When ready to serve pour custard around the gelatine. Lemon jelly, with whites of two eggs added, is very nice.

Baked Pork Chops.

Wipe chops with a damp cloth and trim off excess fat. Core apples and cut in halves crosswise; put apples in pan with a little water and bake ten minutes. In the meantime dust chops with salt, pepper and a trace of sage and sprinkle well with ground bread crumbs. Set chops in pan and put into hot oven to bake, cooking till tender, about twenty-five to thirty minutes. Remove apples and chops to hot platter and make a gravy of the drippings in the pan and a cupful of boiling water, seasoning as necessary.

Dutch Hotchpot.

Boil six carrots with six onions (medium) until tender. In another kettle boil six medium-sized potatoes. Drain all the water from both, put them together, mash them well, add one teaspoon of salt, one-half teaspoon of sugar, one-quarter teaspoon of pepper, one-half cupful of butter and one-half cupful of milk or cream. Beat well and serve hot.

How to Serve Beefsteak.

Broil steak and season on a platter as usual. Make a dressing of bread crumbs with plenty of onion in it as for a stuffed fowl. Shape into small cakes, using an egg to help bind mixture, and brown in butter in a frying pan. Place these on the surface of the steak with a bit of parsley if you have it and serve.

Fruit Roll Pudding.

Make biscuit dough, using butter instead of lard and a spoonful of sugar. Sift flour lightly over the roll, dot with butter, put one cup of sugar and one pint of boiling water in pan. Any kind of fruit can be used. I like it best with sliced apple. Roll it out flat, spread with fruit and roll up pressed as above.

Dutch Cabbage.

Slice one small red cabbage as for slaw. Wash and put on to boil with six tart apples, pared and quartered, and one-quarter pound of fat salt pork. Cover with boiling water; boil one and one-half hours. Drain, remove pork and serve.

Black Kid Gloves.

When black kid gloves become rusty at the finger-ends they may be restored by adding a few drops of ink to a teaspoonful of olive oil and applying it with a camel's hair brush.

WESTERN CANADA'S PROSPERITY

NOT A BOOM, BUT DUE TO NATURAL DEVELOPMENT.

One of the largest banks in Holland has been doing a big business in Western Canada, and Mr. W. Westerman, the President, on a recent visit into the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, expressed himself as being much impressed with present conditions and prospects, and was convinced that the great prosperity of the Dominion was not a boom, but merely the outcome of natural developments.

Not only has money been invested largely in Western Canada by the Holland Banks, but by those of Germany, France, as well as Great Britain. Not only are these countries contributing money, but they are also contributing people, hard headed, industrious farmers, who are helping to produce the two hundred million bushels of wheat and the three hundred million bushels of the other small grains that the Provinces of the West have harvested this season.

During the past fiscal year there came into Canada from the United States 133,710; from Austria Hungary 21,651; from Belgium 1,601; Holland 1,077; France 2,094; Germany 4,664; Sweden 2,394; Norway 1,692; and from all countries the immigration to Canada in that year was 354,237. From the United States and foreign countries the figures will be increased during the present year.

Most of these people have gone to the farms, and it is no far look to the time when the prophecy will be fulfilled of half a billion bushel crop of wheat in Western Canada. Advertisement.

THE RIGHT SOAP FOR BABY'S SKIN

In the care of baby's skin and hair, Cuticura Soap is the mother's favorite. Not only is it unrivaled in purity and refreshing fragrance, but its gentle emollient properties are usually sufficient to allay minor irritations, remove redness, roughness and chafing, soothe sensitive conditions, and promote skin and hair health generally. Assisted by Cuticura Ointment, it is most valuable in the treatment of eczemas, rashes and other itching, burning infantile eruptions. Cuticura Soap wears to a wafer, often outlasting several cakes of ordinary soap and making its use most economical.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston." Adv.

The Crooked Way.

District Attorney Whitman of New York, according to the Washington Star, was talking about the sad case of a western banker who had stolen a great sum from the depositors.

"The man," said Mr. Whitman, "lived beyond his means—motor cars, a house with eleven baths, son at college, daughter coming out, wife hungry for diamonds. The inevitable result followed."

Mr. Whitman smiled and ended:

"The unfortunate fellow got straitened, so he became crooked."

No Strangers Allowed.

Frank H. Hitchcock, the postmaster general of the United States, takes the deepest interest in even the smallest details of the postal service. One evening he was at the Union station in Washington, when he decided to go into one of the railway mail service cars to see how the mail matter was being handled. Being a tall man and very athletic, he easily swung himself from the platform into the car, but he did not find it an easy matter to stay put. A burly postal clerk grabbed him by the shoulders, propelled him toward the side door, and practically ejected him to the platform below.

"What do you mean by that?" asked Hitchcock indignantly.

"I mean to keep you out of this car," replied the clerk roughly. "That fellow Hitchcock has given us strict orders to keep all strangers out of these cars."—Popular Magazine.

BARN CLEANING MADE EASY

Litter Carrier Is One of Greatest Labor Saving Devices That Can Be Installed on Farm.

The illustration represents the greatest labor saving device on this farm. The "dump" is 90 feet from the barn. At the dump we took a scoop scraper and scraped a pit 2½ by 3 feet deep in the center, rising to nothing at the edges, writes W. I. Raymond of St. Charles, Ia., in the Missouri Valley Farmer. This is as large as the manure pile is expected to be. This pit is in clay soil and was smoothed and puddled until it is water tight, thus preventing any leakage of the liquid manure. There is 200 feet of track going along all gutters and into all the box stalls through gates which open for that purpose and the litter carrier goes around corners on switches which work perfectly. We have cleaned the entire barn, which shelters 32 head of dairy cattle, in 39 minutes, doing a good clean job and not hurrying, and the manure is carried where it is not rotting your barn, fouling the air or making your yard muddy or filthy. Small boys enjoy cleaning the barn with this device. The loaded car is pushed to the door and given a vigorous shove. This sends it to the dump, where it trips automatically, dumps, and returns again. The cost is not prohibitive, and there should be more of them in use.

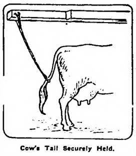
Possible for Dairy Farmer to Grow Balanced Rations—His Salvation Depends on Point.

Molasses is used in many instances to disguise very low-grade materials, including weed seeds. Farmers should buy the molasses and make their own mixtures. The feed question is a big one with dairy farmers, but it is not a serious problem to those who have their barns filled with good alfalfa hay, which can be grown successfully in every county in New Jersey, and which, on the average, would not cost $10 a ton. I am strongly opposed to the purchase of low-grade feeds, unless the price is in proportion, which, unfortunately, is not now the case, as on the average feeds carrying from 5 to 12 per cent protein, and a high percentage of crude fiber, cost per ton practically the same as feeds which carry from 15 to 40 per cent protein, with a correspondingly high rate of digestibility and low percentage of crude fiber. You could do no better than to make a strong drive for high-grade protein feeds, more especially for use in the dairy, and also for the larger growth and use of legumes by dairy farmers. It is possible for the dairy farmer to grow balanced rations, or at least to get along with a very small purchase of feeds, says a writer in an exchange. The salvation of the dairy farmer depends largely upon this point.

SECURE COMFORT IN MILKING

To Prevent Cow From Switching Dirty, Wet Tail in One's Face Simple Device Is Arranged.

In order to avoid the discomfort that comes from having a cow switch her dirty, wet tail in one's face when milking, a simple device like the one shown may be put in use, says the Iowa Homestead. Take a piece of heavy cord and after making a loop in each end attach one to the joist at A and loop the other around the tail. When milking one end can be hooked over a nail or hook at B which will pull the tail above harm's way. When hooked on nail or hook at A the cord should be just long enough to hold the cow's tail out of the filth of the gutter.



Cow's Tail Securely Held.

Autumn Calves.

According to some experiments made in Ireland, calves born in the autumn made faster gains during the winter when housed at night in a well-ventilated shed than did calves which received no shelter, but by midsummer there was little difference in the two lots. Wet weather had a more injurious effect on the unprotected cattle than did a protracted old spell.

Feeding for Butter Fat.

The object in feeding for butter is to give suitable food in such quantities the proper ration will not be disturbed but maintained, and we thus get a properly balanced milk with which to make butter.

TO PROPERLY PACK BUTTER

Farmer's Wife or Daughter Should Study Wants of Customers and Give What Is Desired.

(By W. H. UNDERWOOD.)

When a farmer's wife or daughter has a sufficient quantity of milk to be able to sell some butter, she ought by all means to find out just what sort of butter people will pay the highest price for and how the same is packed for sale, and comply with these conditions. If they do so they will get all it is worth.

On a Saturday not long since while I was waiting in the store several persons brought in butter, and with the exception of that from two customers (myself and one other), it was all made in large rolls, small rolls packed in jars, crocks and pans. Some was made in round prints and wrapped in oil paper, and some of the large rolls were also wrapped in oil paper.

The clerk weighed a basket of eight-pound prints, and they tipped the scales at six and one-half pounds only. I asked him what he paid and he said 18 cents.

I tasted the butter. It was good and the merchant would have been glad to pay 25 cents, the same as I got, but he said he could not sell it for more than 18 cents because it had a mussy-looking appearance.

If each one of those people would pay $1.25 for a brick-shaped mold that will make an extra pound; 50 cents for a roll of parchment paper seven and one-half inches wide, tear the paper with the aid of a ruler into sheets ten and one-half inches long, dip these into cold water and wrap each pound neatly, pack them neatly in a clean box lined with white paper, I assure you that they can then get 25 cents per pound for their butter and the gain in price will give them a good many dollars to put into their pockets.

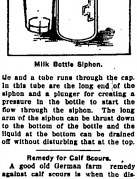
It will not take ten minutes longer on churning day to do this, and the knowledge of putting a first-class article on the market in first-class condition will repay in itself.

It is not best to use the oiled paper. It is impossible to handle the butter without tearing it and it makes the butter look any way but well.

BOTTLE SIPHON FOR LIQUIDS

Handy for Use When Desirable to Remove Milk From Bottom Without Disturbing the Cream.

For the separating of liquids of different gravities, a Connecticut man has designed the apparatus shown herewith. For the purpose of explanation it might be called a bottle siphon, though its use, of course, is not restricted to milk and cream. But supposing it was desirable to remove milk from the bottom of a bottle without disturbing the cream at the top. A cap fits over the mouth of the bottle and a tube runs through the cap. In this tube are the long end of the siphon and a plunger for creating a pressure in the bottle to start the flow through the siphon. The long arm of the siphon can be thrust down to the bottom of the bottle and the liquid at the bottom can be drained off without disturbing that at the top.



Milk Bottle Siphon.

Remedy for Calf Scours.

A good old German farm remedy against calf scours is when the disease is bad and the excrements bloody, three wineglassfuls of good rum and three raw eggs and no milk at all. When the scours cease the rum is stopped, and a decoction of linseed given.

Feed for Calf.

A calf that has skim milk should never have any green feed until it is weaned. Let him have access to dry alfalfa hay or burr clover hay, and he will never have the scours.

For Caked Udder.

For caked udder or other udder inflammation try rubbing with camphorated oil. Use more elbow grease than oil.

DAIRY NOTES

The silo is the best solution of the problem of short pastures.

Good pasture lands are the basis of successful dairy farming.

To make dairying a success we must make it of interest to the boys.

Get your cows started right for the coming cold weather and they will do well in winter.

Summer or winter, a good dairy thermometer pays its way wherever dairy cows are kept.

Give the cows a chance to get under the shed every night now. If too cold keep them in the stable.

Keeping the cows comfortable is a neglected point in the management of the herd during the fall months.

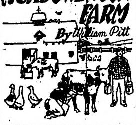
The best cows are never cheap, and are seldom for sale; so it pays to give the heifer calves the best of care.

The milk pail should be the main consideration, but not the sole one in judging the value of the dairy cow.

Green fodder at the tail end of the summer is relished by the cow as ice cream is relished by the school children.

NOTES FROM MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt



Give the cows a name.

Mulch the strawberries.

Baled corn fodder is new.

Use a low wagon in the orchard.

Clean out the old nesting material and burn it.

Milk to the last drop, for the last milk is the best.

Sweet clover can be used as a substitute for red clover.

A single drop of milk contains five million globules of butter fat.

When corn husking time is at hand, the corn ought to be fairly well dried out.

Hogs will husk corn for nothing. The hired man wants four cents a bushel.

It is not what is eaten but what is digested that furnishes strength and muscle.

Vitality is a very important characteristic in the dairy cow or any other farm animal.

Hogging down corn looks like a lazy man's way, but it is a money maker. Try it.

A hen can't be a very respectable hen if she is full of lice—help her by cleaning up the roosts.

In the poultry quarters, be careful to keep filth from accumulating and keep fowls free from lice.

Give the ducks clean water every time you feed them because a duck always drinks while eating.

Don't let a frost scare you into gathering the cabbages. Leave them out until freezing weather comes.

The seed of broom corn has considerable feeding value. It may be removed, dried or put in the silo.

If your sweet corn seed is mixed with field corn, better feed it to the chickens and buy new next spring.

The coming of woven wire fences will help keep down the weeds along the roadsides in a rather roundabout way.

Good shelter will make feed go farther and this is a good time to see that barns and sheds are made tight for the winter.

The beef supply cannot be much increased inside of two years. This means high cattle prices for at least two years more.

Whether brood mare or gelding it is the healthy, well fed horse that exhibits the greatest endurance and nobility in harness.

After corn passes the proper stage at which it should be converted into silage or fodder, it deteriorates very rapidly in quality.

In the horse for active service the breast should not be over medium width and the forelegs should be reasonably close together.

Both cane and kafir are not hurt much for feed if they are caught by frost provided they are cut before much rain falls on them.

A square breasted, well muscled horse will stand more work and more hardship than two lank, loosely-jointed ones, and not require as much power as one of them.

When the calf is just learning to eat boil oatmeal or cornmeal into a thin mush, add a quart of it to a pail of skimmilk and the calves will suck it up with great relish.

Nothing should be more gradual than the development of the power of a draft horse or the speed of a trotting horse and in but few other ways are horses more permanently injured than in pushing their development too rapidly.

A spirit of friendliness toward all young live stock will make you a better man within and also increase the milk yield, fatten the steer, gentle the horse, subdue the calf and encourage the colt.

A hog trough jammed full of crowding, squealing hogs means that some of them will get cheated out of their share of the slop, which is but another way of saying that you also are being cheated by such mismanagement.

If you have several kinds of rough feed on hand it will be a good plan to mix them up in feeding. Stock like a change of feed as well as you do and if their breakfast can be of one kind and their supper of another, so much the better.

One reason why some men do not find sheep profitable is because they have those which would not do well for anybody. Turn off every head of that sort and get some first-class sheep, and you will soon find yourself making some good clean money from 'em.

Pick all fruit carefully.

Plow for corn in the fall.

Start a war on poultry pests.

Store seed corn in a dry place.

Clipping horses' legs is not a good practice.

Excessive sweating in a horse indicates weakness.

The first and greatest law of breeding is "like begets like."

Many imported horses are a "sell" to whoever buys them.

Moderate frosts improve rather than harm the cabbage.

Why not shed farm machinery, the same as the field products?

Store some dust for the chickens' dust bath during midwinter.

It is only recently that sweet clover has been used for feeding livestock.

Silage and alfalfa combined make the foundation of the best dairy ration.

The scrub cow appears in every herd, whether it be a pure bred or a grade herd.

See that the ladders are safe before using them. Unsafe rounds may mean broken legs.

The separator is a helpful factor in establishing the uniformity of the finished product.

When a heifer is first fresh it is especially important that all the milk be drawn from her.

How much does it cost to have that machinery standing out in the weather? Shedding is cheap!

No stock grower can afford to have his animals burn grain for fuel to keep themselves warm.

Sweet potatoes should be dried and then stored in boxes of sand before the frost touches them.

Development of a flock and greatly increased profits cannot be secured without careful breeding.

Letting butter drain well before salting is one of the little things that makes for better quality.

The use of the pure-bred sires has brought about a much better quality of stock kept on the farms.

Keep the hogs quiet, clean and comfortable if you expect the best gain from the food supplied.

Selling butter or cream from the farm robs the soil of less fertility than does any other farm product.

The cost of feeding an animal increases with its weight, but not in direct proportion to its weight.

Hurry all cement work to a finish now, so it will have time to set well before freezing cracks and damages it.

The milk pail with a flaring top has been ruled out. Hooded pails with small openings are much more dirt-proof.

Are you keeping a lot of horses for which you have no special need? Let the other fellow have them at present prices.

See to it that the colt does not become constipated. A small dose of castor oil is a good thing to get the bowels started.

Too often the dairy, poultry and hog work are side lines on the farm. Make them the main line and they will lead you to profit.

Fill the producing cows up on clover hay or alfalfa hay if you can get it instead of fodder or other coarse stuff containing low feed values.

Hogs do not waste corn in the field except in muddy weather. They gain faster, more evenly and more economically in the corn field than in the dry lot.

Good bright corn fodder is worth more for dairy cows than pure timothy hay but both should be fed along with clover or alfalfa to get the best results.

At the Iowa station corn and soy beans hogged down produced 15.7 pounds of pork per bushel of corn. At 8½ cents per pound that is $1.23 per bushel for the corn.

When the pumpkins and squashes are gathered, do not put them in the cellar at once. They will keep much better if stored in some dark outbuilding until real freezing weather comes.

As the cold weather approaches the separator bowl should be filled with hot water before the milk is allowed to run through it. When it is thoroughly warm skimming will be more efficient.

Some sheep are inclined to grow hairy wool. The dealers don't like that and are apt to "dock" you for it. Docking is not what is is cracked up to be. Grow wool, not hair, on the backs of your sheep.

Aerate new milk as soon as possible after it is drawn, but do not do this in a stable. As good a way to do this as any is to pour the milk slowly from one pail to another for a few minutes. This drives off bad odors and saves the fine butter flavor.

Hay cured in cocks in the field is better hay than that rushed to the mow from the swath, and grain threshes out in better condition when stacked, but things have to move fast, now, everywhere, and the hay loader and shock threshing are quick means of getting the crops off the fields.

Uncle Sam's Pay Checks Look Good and Substantial to Females.

Minneapolis.—Recent statistics compiled from application blanks handed into the office of W. W. Davis, director of the civil service bureau at Minneapolis, show that women are going into business more than ever before, and that the number who never worked before is greatly in excess of the men. The figures show conditions obtaining in the civil service department, and it is admitted that possibly the element of romance of holding a federal position may appeal to a woman's mind more strongly than to a man's.

This theory was borne out when Mr. Davis received an application from a married woman who wished to enter the postal service. A married woman may enter any other branch of the federal service, but she is barred by law from the postal department. In spite of this fact, one married woman took Mr. Davis into her confidence and told him that it was her custom to get positions without her husband's knowing anything about it, and that such good understanding obtained in her home that there could not possibly be any objection. Mr. Davis told her that the law was plain and had not been altered to his knowledge.

At the examinations, out of 70 men who took the test, only five had never been employed before. Of the eight women, four had never had employment.

The examination was for letter carriers and mail clerks. It was found that the average salary of the men who had worked before was somewhere between $35 and $100 a month, while the salaries received by the women averaged less. The postal appointments for men average $1,000 a year and about $1,000 for women.

HIT AT STATE SOCIETY.

Southern Minnesota Educators Propose Reorganization of State Association.

Mankato.—The Southern Minnesota Teachers association closed its annual convention Saturday, having had over 650 teachers enrolled. New officers were elected as follows: Superintendent H. C. Bell, Luverne, president; County Superintendent B. B. Kennedy, Brown county, vice president; Miss Margaret Bieri, Wells, treasurer; Miss Emma C. O'Donnel, Mankato, secretary; Professor M. W. Deputy, Mankato state normal school, and Superintendents J. C. Dairies, St. James, and W. B. Thornburg, Owatonna, executive committeemen.

Resolutions were adopted favoring the appointment of an educational commission to revise and codify the school laws and urging the legislature to provide for such commission; also favoring the enactment of a just and equitable teachers' retirement law, similar to those in other states. The Minnesota association was asked to co-operate in urging both of these matters. The teachers' retirement resolution followed the presentation of the matter by Miss Frances Smith, secretary of the Winona Teachers' association, which originated the plan proposed.

It was voted that the next annual meeting be held in the fall of 1913 at approximately this time. This action was preceded by a discussion precipitated by President C. H. Cooper of the Mankato normal, who feared a fall meeting would interfere with next year's meeting of the Minnesota Educational association to be held the first of November. The trend of the discussion was that the Southern Minnesota association is of more benefit to graded school teachers, if not to all teachers, than the state association, and that the fall is the best time to hold it.

Superintendent Thornburg criticised the National Educational association, saying it had little or no value for common teachers, being controlled by the big cities. The same was true he said, of the Minnesota Educational association although to a lesser extent. He favored reconstructing the organization, beginning at the bottom and cutting off its head. He said a movement has been started to form a county teachers' association as the basis for this reorganization.

After the business session, Dr. Richard Burton, of the University of Minnesota, made an address on "The Teaching of Literature."

Battles Robber in Dark.

Minneapolis.—With pitch dark halls, stairways, classrooms and corridors and an even darker basement for its setting, a desperate battle was fought in the new Central high school building, early Sunday between T. Allen, night watchman at the building, and a robber who invaded the place, according to the story which Allen later told the Lake street police. During the conflict the intruder twice opened fire on the watchman, one bullet piercing the latter's hat and knocking it off.

Girl Killed By Auto.

Minneapolis, Nov. 12.—Eight-year-old Ethel Brown, daughter of Mrs. Emily C. Brown, was the sixth victim within the last two months of a fatal automobile accident. She was struck, knocked down and mortally injured on the West River drive, near Twenty-second street east, by a machine driven by Howard H. Smart, 1906 Portland avenue, St. Paul, and died shortly after reaching the St. Mary hospital. The little girl's father, Joseph B. Brown, met death in a similar manner on Oct. 5, 1911.

6,000 VISIT TRAIN.

Average Attendance Up State Is 500 Persons to the Station.

Bemidji.—The best and most thoroughly equipped agricultural special train ever sent out in Minnesota, such is the boast of the agricultural college experts and railroad officials in charge of the train which is touring northern Minnesota on the Soo line in an effort to raise the standard of farming. The train arrived here late Saturday and remained over Sunday.

Everywhere the greatest interest is being shown by farmers and townsfolk. So much interest has been displayed that it is estimated that over 6,000 persons have visited the special the last four days. As eleven places have been touched, this brings the average attendance up to the surprising figure of 500. Many of the places visited have only a few buildings and inhabitants, and so the bulk of the visitors have been from the farming districts.

The women who have visited the train in large numbers at every point have been especially pleased with the domestic science and sewing exhibits and the lectures by Miss Mary L. Bull and Mrs. Margaret Baker, extension experts, and Miss Helen Stearns, of the state library commission at St. Paul. Over 1,500 women have visited this car the last four days. In this car, in addition to an exhibit of false weights and measures by the state department and samples of adulterated oils and condiments, to illustrate the high cost of living, are all the handy appliances and conveniences so dear to the farm wife's heart. There are little cabinets and sinks and other things for the kitchen. There are tables explaining the comparative value of foods and telling how to cook cereals. A plan of a model kitchen and a septic tank also attracts much attention. Miss Stearns is explaining the farm library commission to any locality or any farmer who lives up to the requirements, and many of these will be strewn along the line.

The boys' and girls' car, with its illustrated booklets on contest work, which have been written by boys and girls interested in industrial work in Minnesota, its sewing exhibits, and its samples of corn raised in the acre-yield corn contest carried on by the agricultural college, is attracting wide interest. Not a stop has been made where this car has not been filled to the doors with eager school children. In every instance the schools have been closed and the children have been taken to the train by their teachers. At the various points where parochial schools have predominated, Catholic clergymen have done good work in inducing the children to attend.

In the dairy car much has been shown of particular interest to farmers in northern Minnesota, where dairying is certain to become a leading industry. Here it is that Charles Nelson, extension expert, and George A. Miller of St. Paul, inspector for the state dairy and food department, have been lecturing the past week on balanced rations from feeds that can be grown on the farm, the making of silos and the putting up of silage, the keeping of dairy records, the Babcock milk tester, and other things, explaining the need for cleanliness and sanitation. A cream cooler, invented by the department which Mr. Miller represents, is shown which can be made for $25 and which will accommodate a herd of fifteen cows.

For the poultry industry there is a carload of birds and poultry equipments in charge of N. E. Chapman, extension expert, and Charles Mathews, of the college poultry farm at St. Paul. There has never been a car so fully equipped as this one on any special ever sent out in Minnesota. Every utility breed of chickens, ducks, geese, turkeys and even guinea hens are shown. Egg records are being given away by the train.

In the farm crops car the raising of grains, corn, and potatoes is explained in detail. There are also talks on soil fertility, vegetables, crop rotations, and other features which are attracting much attention. These talks are made by C. E. Brown, the corn and potato expert from Elk River, and E. H. Gibbs, of Minneapolis, former president of the Minnesota Market Gardeners' association. In addition, F. B. McLaren, extension expert, is speaking on the clearing of land and allied subjects.

In the livestock car, W. A. McKerrow, extension expert, assisted by Spencer Cleland and Phil Jordan, both of the agricultural college, is explaining the merits of the animals which occupy the first two cars on the train.

Five Hurt in Auto Plunge.

Duluth, Minn., Nov. 12.—Murdock McDonald and his 13-year-old son, Byron, both of Virginia, were quite seriously injured when a large touring car, in which they were riding, ran off the boulevard drive at Ninth avenue east and rolled down the steep embankment, turning over twice. Two women, Miss Clements Smith and Mrs. Alice Pryor of Eveleth, sisters of Mr. McDonald, who occupied the rear sets, escaped with but a few scratches.

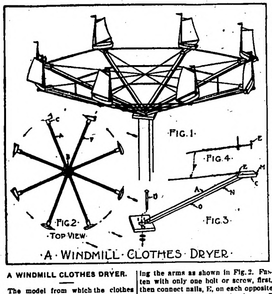
New Injunction Rule.

Washington, Nov. 11.—In promulgating the first revision of the equity rules of federal courts in the last 50 years the supreme court of the United States prohibited the granting of preliminary injunctions without notice to the opposite party and restricted the granting of temporary restraining orders. The court embodied in the new rule many of the points of the Clayton anti-injunction bill, for which labor leaders have been fighting, which has passed the house and waits in the senate.

BOYS' HANDICRAFT

By A. NEELY HALL

Author of "Handicraft for Handy Boys" and "The Boy Craftsman"

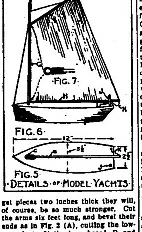


A WINDMILL CLOTHES DRYER.

The model from which the clothes dryer shown in Fig. 1 was patterned has been in use for a number of years, and except when not a breath of air is stirring, its little fleet of yachts, whose sails form the paddles of the windmill, sail around the circular course continuously. The best feature of this windmill is its combination with the clothes dryer, which makes it a practical toy that will serve the laundress excellently on wash day.

If there is a clothes post in the center of the yard, its top may be used for a support, otherwise, you will have to put up a post. A two-by-four will serve the purpose for this. Set it about 18 inches into the ground, and then brace it at the base with diagonal pieces.

Strips one inch thick and two inches wide may be used for the arms of the windmill dryer, but if you can get pieces two inches thick they will, of course, be so much stronger. Cut the arms six feet long, and bevel their ends as in Fig. 3 (A), cutting the lower ends to fit the base board, B, and the upper ends to fit the blocks, C. The upper end of the arms should be about two feet higher than the lower end, which will determine the angle of the bevels. Cut the base block, B, eight inches square, and bore a three-fourths-inch hole through its center for the king-bolt, D, and cut the blocks, C, about two and one-half inches wide by ten inches long. Nail blocks, C, to the upper ends of the arms, and drive the nail, E, into each block near the inner end. Either bolt or screw the longer ends of the arms to Block, B, placing the arms as shown in Fig. 2. Fasten with only one bolt or screw, first, then connect nails, E, on each opposite pair of arms with the wire brace, F (Fig. 3). These wires should be cut about one foot longer than the distance between the nails and be twisted back on themselves at one end, as shown in Figs. 3 and 4; then a nail can be slipped through one of the loops and be used as a lever to twist the wire to take up the slack, in adjusting the arm ends to the proper heights. The distances between the arm ends should be carefully measured, and the arms shifted from side to side until these are all the same; then the lower ends should be fastened securely with a second bolt or screw.



The hulls of the little yachts need not be as perfectly made as would be necessary for sailing in water, because these yachts depend entirely upon their sails; however, for the sake of appearance, it is well to make them as shapely as possible. They can be cut out quickly. Fig. 5 shows a top view of the hull with the dimensions marked upon it. Make the bottom flat enough to provide a nailing surface for fastening the yachts to the blocks, C. Cut the mast, G, and the boom, H, about the length of the hull, and the gaff, I, about seven inches long, and fasten wire loops to the ends of both the boom and the gaff, as shown in Fig. 7, to fit over the mast. A brad driven through the mast, just below the proper heights for the boom and gaff, will prevent the loops from sliding down the mast. Use heavy muslin for the sails, and fasten them to the mast, boom and gaff sticks with heavy linen thread. Brace the mast as shown, and fasten a small pennant to the masthead.

The peg, J (Figs. 5 and 6), is necessary to prevent the boom from swinging over the port side of the yacht. By this arrangement, the yachts will always sail counter clockwise, no matter which way the wind is blowing, provided you mount the yachts with their bows headed in this direction.

Pivot the base block, B, to the post support with a five-eighths-inch bolt about 5 inches long. Bore a five-eighths-inch hole into the top of the post to receive the end of the bolt, and in mounting the base block place several washers betwen it and the post. Screw one-half-inch screw-eyes into the ends of blocks, C (M), and also into each of the arms at N and O, as shown in Fig. 3, to slip clotheslines through. It is not necessary to cut a clothes-line into pieces, for after running it through one row of screw-eyes, it may be run down to the next row below, and so on through all the eyes.

Again the Drummer's Wiles

This Time Whole Carloads of Men Are the Victims of His "Veracious" Imagination.

"Yes," said the drummer for a grocery house. "I am on my way east to reap the reward of virtue. This may seem improbable to you, but right here in my pocket I have a letter from a Philadelphia law firm which says that a gentleman dying a few days ago left me $5,000 in his will."

"Relative, of course?" was observed.

"No, sir. Not even an acquaintance. In fact, I never even saw the man in my life. I can't say that I ever heard his name until I received this letter."

"He must have been a queer man to have left $5,000 to a perfect stranger?"

"I agree with you there," said the drummer, "but I suppose it all came about through his wife. Five years ago I rode in the same palace car with her from Chicago to Pittsburg. Our seats were just opposite. She was young and handsome and alone. She intuitively knew I was a drummer—one of the best in the country—and she expected that I would buy the magazines for her or make some other excuse to start a conversation. Then would come chin-chin and flattery, and I would propose an elopement."

"And, of course, it all happened?"

"You wrong me, sir. That's where my $5,000 comes in. I never looked her square in the face once during the long journey. I ignored her as if she did not exist. She must have been dreadfully puzzled over the matter, and told her husband when she got home. He probably employed a private detective to ascertain my name and address, and then added a codicil to his will. Gentlemen, let my case be a shining example to you and—"

And he rose up and went up the aisle and sat down beside the only female on the car, who was a very lovely, lonely girl, and he began to tell jokes and stories and make her laugh, and the other five kicked each other and said that he ought to be flung off the train for the way he had euchered them.—Baltimore American.

Fondness for Fine Clothes.

A young nobleman who died some time ago was found to possess a wardrobe so vast that if he had worn each garment only once he must have spent his whole day in changing. Let us be thankful that God took this dear brother before the blight of the tailors' strike descended upon him. He could never have survived its privations. And yet this mania for buying clothes is not necessarily a mark of effeminacy. In fact, if we go back into history we find that it has often accompanied an exceptional valor and courage. The cavaliers of England under Charles I. were tremendous fighters, but how they did love to decorate themselves and perfume themselves. Wallenstein's men in Germany were veritable fire-eaters, but how beautiful they were to look at. Never a woman thought more of laces and furbelows, of scents and ribbons. And it is upon record that Clive, the hero of Plassy, once ordered "two hundred shirts, the best and finest that love and money could buy." But let us hope that the tailors' strike will soon come to an end and that the jeunesse doree will be able to resume its ancient custom of ordering a new suit the first thing after breakfast every morning.—London Mail.

Maternalism.

Kind Gentleman—What are you going to do, Johnny, when you become a man?

Johnny—Nawthin'.

Kind Gentleman—What? Not going to do anything?

Johnny—No. Just as soon as I started something ma would tell me to stop.—Judge.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Duluth.—August Marker, 14 years old, was shot and killed while hunting deer near Two Harbors Sunday, by the accidental discharge of his rifle. It was the first accident of the hunting season.

Minneapolis, Nov. 9.—Charles W. Klugman, proprietor of a confectionery store at 630 Lyndale avenue north, was shot and seriously wounded in his store by William Meyers at whose home Klugman formerly lived.

Duluth.—The deer season opened Monday, and 3,000 hunters went into the forests in this vicinity. They come from all over the country, New York furnishing a delegation of ten and Ohio forty. About 5,000 men will be in the woods by the end of the week. The game is unusually plentiful this year. The season lasts twenty days.

Winona.—Mrs. Patrick Lyons, wife of a farmer residing near Plainview, and Edward Lyons, her brother-in-law, were brought to Winona hospital, both in serious condition as a result of burns received in a kitchen stove explosion. Lyons tried to smother the flames, which had enveloped his sister-in-law.

Winona.—Rev. E. V. Dubois, who recently resigned the presidency of Parker college at Winnebago City, Minn., has been appointed pastor of the Methodist church at Red Wing by Bishop Quayle, to succeed Rev. Dr. S. Arthur Cook, who has been made pastor of the Central Methodist church of this city.

Winona.—The 16-year-old son of Adolph Timm, a blacksmith of North Bend, was killed instantly by the accidental discharge of his own gun. With two companions, Young Timm was launching a raft and his rifle caught on a projection and was discharged. The shot entered the boy's neck below the chin and came out back of his left ear.

Shakopee.—When Frank Shonka of St. Lawrence returned home for dinner Saturday he found the body of his 7-months-old child lying on a stump in the yard. A bloody ax was nearby. Mrs. Shonka was moaning and tearing her hair and talking incoherently. The coroner and sheriff removed her to the jail in this city. She is said to be violently insane.

Hastings.—The grand jury returned an indictment of murder in the first degree against Ivan Viskity, alias John Wiskic, for the shooting of Mrs. Anna Blazich at South St. Paul October 3. The defendant was arraigned before Judge William Hodgson in district court and the time of pleading was extended to last Monday, November 11. W. H. Gillett of Hastings was appointed his counsel.

Mankato.—The Southern Minnesota Teachers association closed its annual convention at noon Saturday, having had over 650 teachers enrolled. New officers were elected as follows: Superintendent H. C. Bell, Luverne, president; County Superintendent B. B. Kennedy, Brown county, vice president; Miss Margaret Bieri, Wells, treasurer; Miss Emma C. O'Donnel, Mankato, secretary; Professor M. W. Deputy, Mankato state normal school, and Superintendents J. C. Dairies, St. James, and W. B. Thornburg, Owatonna, executive committeemen.

Hamline.—Evidence that the majority of farmers in Minnesota want the annual state fair set back a week, or even two, instead of opening the first Monday in September, was presented to the board of fair managers Saturday by the special committee of society appointed to investigate. The committee, consisting of C. F. Mahnke, Moose Lake, John B. Irwin, Minneapolis, and E. W. Randall, St. Paul, has inquired of interested persons in all parts of the state and prepared a report showing an overwhelming preference for a later fair date. The managers took no formal action, but state they are convinced the people of Minnesota favor the second week in September for the fair. They will present the proposed change to the American Association of State Fairs at its meeting in Chicago, December 2-3 and urge a change in the present schedule.

Minneapolis, Nov. —Six persons were burned, one probably fatally and two others seriously, in a fire which wrecked the home of E. O. Smith. By fighting his way up a smoke-filled staircase and standing directly in the flames while, terribly burned himself, he dropped his four children from an upper window, Smith saved the little ones from certain death. An explosion of gas accumulating in a wood stove caused the fire. The injured: Earl Smith, aged 6, terribly burned over more than two-thirds of his body; Ruth Smith, age 4, badly burned about head, face, neck, arms, hands and body; E. O. Smith, terribly burned about face, neck, arms, hands, body and right leg; Helen Smith, age 2, burned on face, neck, forehead, both arms and body; Mrs. E. O. Smith, burned about face and hands; Clara Smith, burned slightly about face.

St. Paul. — Eight-year-old Ethel Brown, daughter of Mrs. Emily C. Brown, 2903 Eigth street south, Minneapolis, was struck, knocked down and mortally injured on the West River drive, near Twenty-second street east, by a machine driven by Howard E. Smart, 1005 Portland avenue, St. Paul, and died shortly after reaching St. Mary's hospital. The little girl's father, Joseph B. Brown, met death in a similar manner, October 5, 1911, when the automobile in which he was riding was upset near Jordan, Minn., and he was thrown out, suffering a fracture of the skull.

Duluth.—Murdock McDonald and his 13-year-old son Byron of Virginia were seriously injured when a big touring car in which they were riding ran off the boulevard drive at Ninth avenue east and rolled down the steep embankment, turning over twice. Miss Clements Smith and Mrs. Alice Prior of Eveleth, sisters of Mr. McDonald, who occupied the rear seats, escaped with only a few scratches. Martin Brady, a boy who was sitting on a rock near the road when the big car left the driveway, was struck and knocked down the hill. His injuries are not serious.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

A. WENDELL JACKSON'S MIGHTY COUP

"Who's Jackson?"

A lot of bankers have been asking this question during the past few days.

Jackson? Why, he's the same person who financed China to her recent $50,000,000 loan when the so-called six-powers group of bankers representing Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, Japan and the United States wouldn't lend the budding republic all this real money.

This new factor in world finance is a Massachusetts Yankee. His father was a seafaring man—no wonder the son's rovings around the world. Jackson was born in Chelsea, Mass., but he was only a boy of six when Jackson, Sr., decided to pioneer it to California. The family took ship to the Isthmus and the train across, and so made their way to California. The boy went to public school in San Francisco and then to high school—college was not in his thoughts. This in 1870. He later graduated from the University of California.

One day he chanced to read in a newspaper that there was a scholarship to be awarded in the budding University of California at Berkeley, just across the bay, and the youth who might pass the best examination could have it. Young Jackson tried; he won. That changed his whole life. He had to work out the rest of his expenses at the university, but this was not difficult. He was graduated from the university in 1874, afterwards studying in Freiburg and Leipsic, Germany. Later he was interested in financing big enterprises throughout most of Europe and Asia, especially China.

The story of how this adventurer in the higher realms of finance took the wind out of the sails of the proudest money magnates of the world is delicious. These gentlemen of the eminent six-power syndicate were busy telling China that the money she so badly needed could only be had by allowing them a say-so on how it was to be spent. China demurred. As long as she had to pay 5 per cent. interest, why not have some control over the way the loan might be used?

The trouble was at its height, the bankers backing and filling, the diplomats in despair, when Jackson reached London. Here was big game. He promptly cabled to Peking that he could get the money on any terms suitable to China and added that these particularly uppish financiers of the six powers were not the only bankers in the world.

China accepted, and Jackson, visionary, promoter, shoestring financier, a Col. Sellers-up-to-date, got the money!

As he says, "There's $50,000,000 waiting for the Chinese republic now and as many more millions as it requires in the future, if it will have them.

"The first instalment has already been handed over to China. The Chinese minister in London has been instructed to inform Great Britain that the contract has been completed. Sir J. N. Jordan, British minister at Peking, has also been notified."

MRS. LUND BOOMS "LITTLE FARM" PLAN.

Mrs. Haviland H. Lund of Los Angeles, Cal., one of the leading advocates of the "little farm" idea, is now in the east organizing local branches of the National Forward to the Land league.

One of the objects of the league is to purchase tracts of land on the outskirts of the big cities throughout the United States and subdivide them into one acre farms, to be equipped and turned over to the industrious poor.

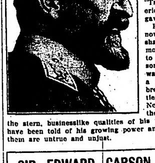
Mrs. Lund has succeeded in interesting many prominent people, who have pledged their moral and financial support.

"I am of the opinion," said Mrs. Lund, "that our idea is one of the few logical solutions for the living problem of many of the big cities' poor. The plan has been in operation for several years near San Diego, Cal., and has proved successful in every way. The hearty interest your leading men and women seem to be taking in the cause certainly gives me great pleasure and encouragement.

"There is plenty of land in the vicinity of all large cities which will find its greatest productiveness under the efforts of the small tract farmer."

"The plan is important to the whole community. Many of the dependents and the aged who may seem to be useless as productive units in the strenuous life of the city can earn a good living and happiness on a properly cultivated one-acre farm."

KING FERDINAND NOW TAKEN SERIOUSLY



A calm observation of the effects of the Balkan war on the restless, suspicious "concert of Europe" leads to one illuminating conclusion. The map makers, national carpenters of the embassies, and the foreign ministries have at last decided to take seriously the man of the hour, Ferdinand, the tsar of the Bulgarias. No longer do you hear references to the "Tsarvenu"—the title which Sir Frederick Burnand and London Punch gave Ferdinand of Sofia in 1908.

His pictures are seen everywhere now—the bright "aiglon" eye; the sharp, Napoleonic nose; the firm mouth; thin lips and beard trimmed to a point. Ferdinand is the grandson of Louis Philippe of France, who was driven into exile by a quip and a partiality for curiosities in umbrellas which shocked the sensibilities of the fastidious Parisians. Necessarily a Bourbon, he is unlike the entire Bourbon line, inheriting the stern, businesslike qualities of his maternal ancestors. Many stories have been told of his growing power among the crowned heads. Most of them are untrue and unjust.

SIR EDWARD CARSON CALLED DICTATOR.

A remarkable pen-picture of Sir Edward Carson, the leader of the unionist "revolt" against home rule in Ulster, who in a short time has become one of the most talked of and powerful men in the United Kingdom, is contributed to the London Graphic by Philip Gibbs.

Mr. Gibbs, who as a descriptive journalist has made for himself a place something like that of the late G. W. Stevens, says in part:

"Sir Edward Carson is the dictator of Ulster. * * * The people of Ulster, apart from that Catholic minority who on half-holidays may hang him in effigy on street lamp posts, are puppets who dance when he pulls the strings. At the word "Go" from him they would advance at quick step to any kind of danger, folly, and death. He can play upon their emotions as upon a fiddle with more than five strings, with fifty or a hundred thousand strings plucked from their hearts, and ready to quiver at the sound of that deep persuasive voice of his. He holds their hearts in the hollow of his hand.

"He has put a spell upon them. They have a kind of worship for him, as a demi-god, a superman, master of their fate, champion of their rights. For a week their clamorous enthusiasm has rolled up to him in waves of hoarse shouts and cheers, as he has gone like a conquering hero (anticipating victory and accepting his laurels in advance) on a triumphal progress.

U. S. RAID 72 CITIES; ARREST 173 QUACKS

ARRESTS MADE ON CHARGE OF MISUSING MAIL—MANY PROMINENT PERSONS.

SLEUTH WORK MONTHS

Prosecution for Alleged Violation of Penal Code Most Extensive Ever Undertaken—Ninety Already Indicted.

Washington, Nov. 21.—Acting under direction of Postmaster General Hitchcock, postoffice inspectors and United States marshals in seventy-two leading cities of the country began practically simultaneous raids for the arrest of 173 persons charged with using the mails to promote criminal medical practices or the sale of drugs and instruments used for criminal purposes.

Most Cities Interested.

The number of arrests to be made in the respective cities follows:

New York, two; Buffalo, three; Pittsburg, seven; Indianapolis, five; Chicago, nine; St. Paul, five; Fort Worth, four; St. Louis, three; Omaha, four; Oklahoma City, five; Portland, Ore., nine; Denver, five; Seattle, eight; Spokane, five; San Francisco, seven; Oakland, Cal., eight; Los Angeles, three; San Jose, three; Mobile, three; Marietta, Ohio, three; Dallas, three.

Two each in Albany, Washington, Memphis, Birmingham, Cleveland, Steubenville, Ohio; Duluth, Winona, Minn.; San Antonio, Houston, New Orleans, Kansas City, Topeka, Alameda, Cal.

One each in Atlanta, Cincinnati, Toledo, Minneapolis, Galveston, Salt Lake City, Ithaca and Elmira, N. Y.; East Orange, N. J.; Lancaster and Pine Bank, Pa.; Cumberland, Md.; Charleston and Columbia, S. C.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Columbus, Springfield, Mt. Vernon, Dayton and Convoy, Ohio; Fort Wayne and Terre Haute, Ind.; Peoria, Ill.; Kalamazoo and Iron River, Mich.; Holden, Mo.; Muskogee, Okla.; Wichita, Kans.; Council Bluffs, Ia.; Bellingham, Crescent and Tacoma, Wash.; Sacramento, Petaluma, Fresno and Glendale, Cal.

The arrests are made for misuse of the mails, each case being based on the use of the mails to solicit business or dispose of wares. This concerted official action covered the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the lakes to the gulf. Many of the persons to be arrested are prominent, commercially and socially, in their communities. Some are leading physicians; others are rich and influential business men; yet others are men who live by their wits and are comparatively little known without their own small coterie of associates; and one is a Chinaman who is alleged to have practiced his calling upon women of his own race and upon those of the lower strata of society.

Violation of Penal Code Alleged.

All of the arrests are to be made for alleged violations of section 211 of the penal code of the United States which bars from the mails any vile or obscene matter whether sealed or unsealed; any advertisement letter or circular proposing or suggesting criminal practices; or any packet containing any substance, drug or thing intended to be used for immoral or unlawful purposes.

Chief Inspector Robert S. Sharp of the postoffice department and many of his force of 390 inspectors have been working on the cases for many months. The development of the plans which just culminated is the most extensive raid in the history of any department of the government.

Approximately ninety of the persons arrested already have been indicted by United States grand juries in various parts of the country, and the cases of the others will be presented to grand juries now sitting as rapidly as may be feasible.

"Pill Doctors.

Approximately 20 per cent of those arrested are so-called "pill doctors"—men who advertise their practice by correspondence or otherwise—and send to their patients, either by mail or by express, various compounds in the form of pills or powders. Analysis of these compounds by the government authorities is said to have disclosed that some of them are wholly innocuous, while other are dangerous poisons. Under another section of the penal code the sending of poisons through the mails is expressly forbidden.

Pipe Fires Whiskers; Man Dies.

Middleton, N. Y., Nov. 21.—A spark from the pipe of John E. Gibson, a farmer, ignited his long whiskers. The flames spread to his clothing and he was burned to death.

Wilson Denies Statements.

Hamilton, Bermuda, Nov. 21.—"All statements about selections for the cabinet may be disregarded until I make the announcement myself," declared President-elect Wilson when he was told of the reports published in the United States. Governor Wilson said he had not offered or intimated an offer of a position in his cabinet to any one. It is learned that William J. Bryan has not been invited to Bermuda, and it is said he is not expected here during Mr. Wilson's stay.

WOMEN CONFIDENT OF BALLOT

DELEGATES TO SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION ASSEMBLE.

Merits of Woman's Rights to Be Discussed Saturday Night Which Is College Night.

Philadelphia, Nov. 21.—Enthusiastic in the belief that their cause will triumph and that the privilege of the ballot will be granted women throughout the United States within the next few years, hundreds of delegates from all parts of the country arrived here to participate in the Forty-fourth annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage association, which has just opened. Headquarters have been established in a big hotel, the lobby of which is decorated with large yellow posters outlining the convention program and flags bearing the suffragists' war cry, "Votes for women."

Among the national officers here are Dr. Anna Shaw, president; James Lee Laidlaw, secretary; Miss Jennie Appley, treasurer; Mrs. Mary Ware Dennett, auditor, and Miss Susan Walker Fitzgerald, recording secretary. J. H. Braley of the California Men's league, who is referred to as the "father of woman suffrage in California," and one of the few men delegates to the convention, said that the men of his state are intensely interested in the struggle being waged in the East in behalf of woman's rights.

"This is the biggest convention we have ever had," Dr. Shaw said, "and I think it will be the most effective. New York and Pennsylvania are running close in the suffrage fight and all over the country membership has increased until it now numbers 100,000."

The convention, which will continue until next Tuesday, is being held in Witherspoon hall with two sessions daily.

Mayor Blackenburg welcomed the delegates to the city and Mrs. Ellen H. Price, president of the Pennsylvania Suffrage association, extended the welcome in behalf of that organization. Jane Addams of Chicago will preside to night and Dr. Shaw will deliver her annual address. Friday night has been set apart for the men.

A feature of the convention is expected to be a discussion on Saturday—college night—of the merits of woman's rights. Miss M. Casey Thomas, president of Bryn Mawr college, will be in the chair, and Colonel J. Wotten will speak both for and against equal suffrage. Sunday afternoon there will be a mass meeting at the Metropolitan opera house. Monday night's session will be addressed by Baroness von Suttner of Austria.

Student Fastened to Post.

Grand Forks, Nov. 21.—Members of the anti-fussing league of the University of North Dakota separated Clarence Finch, a student, from his girl companion while he was going to a music recital, took him two miles along a railroad track and tied him to a mile post where they left him to get free as best he could. This was the first demonstration of disapproval of young men accompanying co-eds to campus events. Two hours later Finch gained his freedom and returned to the university campus.

DAILY MARKET REPORT.

Twin City Markets.

Minneapolis, Nov. 21.—Wheat, Dec., 80⅝c; May, 86½c; No. 1 northern, 82⅜c; No. 2 northern, 81⅛c; No. 1 durum, 82½c; No. 3 corn, 46c; No. 3 white oats, 29c; barley, malting, 59c; No. 2 rye, 58⅞; No. 1 flax, $1.22¾.

Duluth, Nov. 21.—Wheat, Dec., 81⅝c; May, 86½c.

South St. Paul, Nov. 21. — Cattle — Steers, $6@7; cows, $4.10@5.50; calves, $5.25@9; hogs, $7.50@7.60; sheep and lambs, $3@6.75.

Chicago Livestock.

Chicago, Nov. 21.—Cattle—Receipts, 27,000; market steady to 10c lower; beeves, $5.25@10.60; Texas steers, $4.30@5.60; western steers, $5.40@9.10; stockers and feeders, $4.10@7.25; cows and heifers, $2.70@7.35; calves, $6.50@10.25. Chicago Grain.

Chicago, Nov. 21.—Wheat today reflected weakness at Liverpool and went to a new low level for this year's crop. Receipts northwest of here continued heavy. The opening ranged from ⅛c lower to ⅛c advance. May started at 89⅞c to 90⅛c, a drop of ⅛@¼c to ⅜@½c, rallied to 90⅜c and then fell back to 90⅛c.

Further weakness ensued notwithstanding big export clearances and abrupt stoppage of Kansas and Nebraska farm deliveries. The close, however, was firm with May ⅛c net higher at 90⅛@90¼c.

Cash Wheat—No. 2 red, 99c@$1.02; No. 3 red, 90@98c; No. 2 hard, 84½@85¾c; No. 3 hard, 83@85½c; No. 1 northern, 85@86c; No. 2 northern, 84@85½c; No. 3 northern, 80@83c; No. 2 spring, 83@85c; No. 3 spring, 80@82c; No. 4 spring, 74@80c; velvet chaff, 80@85½c; durum, 83@88½c.

May corn opened ⅛@¼c to ⅛@⅜c off at 47@47⅛c, and rebounded to 47⅜@47½c.

Despite wheat weakness corn continued firm. The close was at 47⅝c for May, ⅛@⅜c above last night.

Cash Corn — No. 3, 52@54c; No. 3 white, new, 46½@47c; No. 3 yellow, old, 56½c, new 47c; No. 4 old, 50@51c; new 44@45½c; No. 4 white, new, 45@45½c; No. 4 yellow, old, 53c, new, 45@45½c.

May oats, which started unchanged to a shade lower at 32@32⅛c, to 32⅜c, rose to 32⅛@32½c.

Radical Faction Defeated.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 21.—After a debate that lasted all day members of the radical wing of the American Federation of Labor were defeated by a vote of nearly 2 to 1 in their attempt to have adopted the principle of industrial unionism in place of its policy of trade autonomy. Two hundred and forty-nine delegates voted against the minority report of the committee on education which favored the principle of industrial unionism and 143 voted in its favor. The defeat is decisive.

SUSPEND FIGHTING TO DISCUSS PEACE

PLENIPOTENTIARIES FOR THE BELLIGERENT POWERS ARE CONFERRING.

HOLD CONQUERED LAND.

Believed Allies Will Insist on Holding Such Territory—Cholera Counted on by Turks.

London, Nov. 21.—The war has shifted for a time from the field of arms to that of diplomacy. It may be that the war is near an end. Plenipotentiaries for the belligerent powers are meeting at the village of Hademkul, a few miles outside the capital, for a preliminary division of the terms of an armistice. In the meantime the Turkish, Bulgarian and Servian commanders have ordered a cessation of hostilities, although cannonading which Nazim Pasha reports as unimportant has just occurred.

Allies Demand Much.

The sweeping terms which the allies were said to have demanded Tuesday as a basis for the armistice, appear not to have been advanced, but the plenipotentiaries may not know the levels of the platform until their meeting for its discussion is well advanced and it is almost certain that it will be on the basis of the Balkan states holding all the conquered country when a permanent treaty of peace is signed.

How many vestiges of his former power they are prepared to concede the Turk depends largely upon two factors—the strength and supplies of the allied army threatening the gates of Constantinople and the extent to which the cholera specter has embarrassed their plans. It is certain that great transport difficulties hamper the Bulgarian army on account of the distance from its base and the rough roads.

Weakening Disease.

The cholera is counted on by the Turks to weaken the Bulgarian ambition for a triumphal march into the capital and the celebration of mass in St. Sophia. But to make assurance doubly sure the Turks have resorted to the amazing plan of transforming the mosque into a pest house and have crowded 2,000 cholera-stricken patients within its walls.

RELEASE OF INFORMERS.

Rose, Webber and Vallon Likely to Be Set Free at Once.

New York, Nov. 21.—It will be in broad daylight and not under cover of darkness, as they had anxiously hoped for that "Bald Jack" Rose, "Bridgie" Webber and Harry Vallon will be set at liberty, according to the program for the release of the three informers against Charles Becker and his four gun men tools, so far as it could be learned last night. Mid-afternoon today is the time tentatively set.

The underworld has been awaiting with interest an intimation as to the time when they were to go free, for the feeling has prevailed there that the friends of the four gangsters about to be sentensed to death for the murder of Herman Rosenthal were only awaiting the liberation of Rose, Webber and Vallon to take revenge upon the trio.

The three will be brought before Coroner Feinberg and District Attorney Whitman will present to that official, it is said, stipulations signed by him with counsel for the witnesses. If Mr. Whitman declares that the three men have kept faith with the state in giving relevant testimony, the coroner will release them from commitment.

Sam Schepps, fourth of the state's valuable witnesses against Becker and the gun men also probably will be released during daylight.

42 Persons Die in Hurricane.

Kingston, Jamaica, Nov. 21. — The western end of the island of Jamaica has been devastated by a hurricane which lasted five days. A great tidal wave swept over both the north and south coasts, practically wiping out Savanna La Mar and Lucca, both towns of considerable importance. According to a report brought in by steamer, 42 persons were killed at Montego Bay.

Building Collapses; 40 Men Escape.

Saskatoon, Sask., Nov. 21.—A six-story steel and cement building under construction here collapsed, all six floors falling in a heap in the basement. Forty men employed on the building had just left their work and no one was injured. The damage is placed at $50,000.

Jury for Cash Register Trial.

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 21.—After the dismissing of the entire second regular venire summoned in the cases of John H. Patterson and 29 other officials or ex-officials of the National Cash Register company of Dayton Ohio, a jury was completed from 12 men who had been called by Judge Howard Hollister personally, with the consent of both sides. The charge against the accused men is that they violated the criminal section of the Sherman anti-trust act. Attorney Harrison appears for the government.

CHARLES H. HYDE IS ON TRIAL

FORMER N. Y. CHAMBERLAIN ACCUSED OF CORRUPTION.

Principal Witness Is the Former Official of a Wrecked Bank.

New York, Nov. 21.—Justice Goff's court, which has just completed the notable trials of Police Lieutenant Charles Becker and the four gunmen—slayer of gambler Rosenthal—has just been the stage for the opening of another legal drama of country-wide interest. The case of Chas. H. Hyde, former city chamberlain, who is charged with having corruptly compelled Joseph Grebin, former head of the Northern bank, to lend the Carnegie Trust company $102,000 by threatening to withdraw city funds from the Northern bank. The indictment against Hyde was found by the grand jury on May 1, 1911.

The principal witness against Hyde is Joseph G. Robin, who has pleaded guilty to grand larceny in that he stole funds from the Washington Savings bank and has been in the Tombs for 22 months. Robin will get a suspended sentence for his work in building up the case against Hyde and Banker Cummins.

The penalty in Hyde's case in the event of conviction may be $5,000 fine, or 10 years' imprisonment, or both.

Hyde, for 22 years a close personal friend of Mayor Gaynor, and for many years his law partner, was appointed to the post of city chamberlain, the highest salaried office within the gift of the mayor, soon after Gaynor's election.

In the fall of 1910 Hyde's name came prominently before the public when it was charged in a criminal trial that he had taken part in the distribution of a $500,000 corruption fund raised to beat the race track bills then pending. Hyde was sought as a witness, but he suddenly disappeared from public view early in December and for more than 50 days was not to be found. Rumors placed him in Florida, where he was said to be living in his houseboat, the "Stop-A-While." He was not found until Jan. 16, when he returned to his office and went to work.

Meanwhile the Northern bank, of which Robin was director, had failed. The failure of the Carnegie Trust company followed. Robin swore before the grand jury that Hyde had maintained large deposits of city money in the chain of banks of which William J. Cummins, the master of the Carnegie Trust company, was interested. Robin added that Hyde had practically forced him to transfer $130,000 to the Carnegie Trust company under a promise of depositing in the Northern bank, Robin's tottering property, city money to make the withdrawal good.

$40,000,000 in Bonds Sold.

New York, Nov. 21.—Announcement has been made here that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad company has sold $40,000,000 of one-year, five per cent notes to a banking syndicate headed by J. P. Morgan and company. The issue is largely in the nature of a refunding operation as the New Haven has $30,000,000 of one-year four per cent notes maturing early in 1913.

Physician Arrested.

St. Paul, Nov. 21.—Dr. George Lemke, a Minneapolis physician, with offices at 605 Lincoln building, was arrested by George H. Drake, postal inspector, on a federal warrant charging him with depositing a letter in the Minneapolis postoffice telling where and how a criminal operation could be performed. Dr. Lemke was arraigned before Judge Willard in St. Paul. He pleaded not guilty and bail was fixed at $2,500. The arrest of Dr. Lemke was made simultaneously with

"LEAN YEAR" ADVICE.

Large Crops Are Pitfalls, Declares Hill at Congress.

Minneapolis. — Large crops have their disadvantages as well as their compensations, according to James J. Hill, empire builder.

Mr. Hill, speaking before the second Minnesota Conservation and Agricultural congress at the Armory, said that one of the great disadvantages of a big crop was that farmers lulled themselves into fancied security.

"People read returns from the harvest fields this fall and conclude that soil fertility cannot have been impaired where the yield per acre is so far above the acre average," said Mr. Hill. "Worse yet, the farmer himself, lulled into fancied security by the large crop of 1912, unconsciously assumes that this year's experience is likely to be repeated without any special effort on his part.

"The first business of real conservation is to lift agriculture to the rank of a science well understood and practically applied."

"The farmers of Minnesota need just such lessons as the Conservation congress is giving them," said Archbishop Ireland. "The fault of many is that they are not responding to suggestions. They are living as in the pioneer days, watching their trees and counting their cows.

"Home conditions should be improved that we may love our farms. The rust of the city is largely because of the lack of social culture."

After warning those present of the dangers of over-confidence because of a great crop one year, Mr. Hill said that agricultural problems should be studied to help when lean harvests were the rule. He said that farming was a failing occupation, that the percentage of urban life increases and that of rural life decreases.

"In 30 years the rural population has fallen 24 per cent in this country," continued Mr. Hill. "For forty years, including a period marked by the greatest advance in other industries, immense growth of railroad transportation, lowering of rates on farm commodities to our principal markets, and all the inducements that should bring men to the farm and increase its output, farm population receives only a small increase, the number of farms remains almost the same and the acre yield of four principal crops shows a failing off in every case.

"Men are being wasted in the city who are needed in the country. The lives of those who are fixed by choice or necessity to the soil are to some extent wasted because consumed in unintelligent and ineffectual efforts. The soil is being unskilfully treated and is returning a diminishing product."

Characterizing the farmer of today as a business man in every sense of the word, Edmund D. Fisher, deputy comptroller of New York city, addressed the congress on banking reform and its interest to the agriculturist. He said that the farmer's business is progressing at such a rapid rate that broader credit relations must be developed between him and the banker. He urged a central banking system. "The fear of central control of the fear of the ignorant mind," he said. "Prosperity in this country means high money rates which in turn kill prosperity. The delegates to this congress have a duty to perform. They should pass strong resolutions in favor of the imperative need of banking reform and then see that their respective congressmen take prompt action."

Land Show Is On.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The second annual products exposition has now opened its doors. Seven great states of the American Northwest are showing the rest of the world what they have and can produce from the soil. This year's exposition is the greatest of the so-called "land shows" ever held in the United States. It is the greatest, since it is an exclusive show of the products of the soil, land companies and exhibits of a like character that have served to make some exposition larger than the Minneapolis show having been excluded by the exposition management.

Physicians Elect Officers.

Pipestone.—At the annual meeting of the Southwestern Minnesota Medical society, L. Sogge of Windom was elected president, C. L. Sherman of Luverne vice president, Emil King of Fulda secretary and treasurer. Windom was selected as the next meeting place of the society in May of next year.

To Test Duluth Franchise.

Duluth.—With only two dissenting votes the city council decided to test the validity of the franchise under which the Duluth Street Railway company is operating, and voted an appropriation of $15,000 to carry the investigation to the supreme court of Minnesota. This money will be used in court expense and in paying the fees of the attorneys to assist City Attorney Carmichael, they being Frank B. Kellogg of St. Paul and Francis W. Sullivan of this city.

THANKSGIVING DAY PROCLAMATION

Issued by Governor Eberhart.

The return of another Thanksgiving season finds the people of Minnesota with more cause for sincere gratitude toward the Supreme Giver of Good Gifts than at any other period in the history of the state, for at no time in that history has there been larger and more widespread prosperity, and more convincing evidence of marked advance along the lines of right thinking and humane and unselfish conduct, tending to the mental and spiritual uplift of this great commonwealth.

Many of the great sociological problems of the hour are being seriously studied and gradually worked out in this state, while encouraging progress is being made along all lines of material development.

It is fitting, therefore, in recognition of these most gratifying conditions and in conformity with the proclamation of the president of the United States, that I join with him in designating Thursday, the 28th day of November, 1912, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer throughout the state, and I earnestly recommend the observance of the day by a revival of the spiritual enthusiasm that marked the establishment of this annual custom in the trying hours of a young and struggling nation.

Governor.

Complete Figures Show Socialist Only Party to Gain Over 1908 Vote.

St. Paul. — Theodore Roosevelt's plurality in Minnesota, according to complete but unofficial figures received at the state capitol, is 19,394. With all the counties heard from, the vote on president is as follows:

Taft, 64,334; Wilson, 106,462; Roosevelt, 125,856; Debs, 27,505; Chafin, 7,886; Reimer, 2,212.

The total vote of the state on president is 334,255, the largest in the history of the state. The vote four years ago was 331,304. The largest vote heretofore was in 1896, before the constitution was amended to prevent persons without their final naturalization papers from voting. The total that year was 332,752.

The combined Taft and Roosevelt vote this year is 190,190, compared with 195,843 cast for Taft four years ago, showing a loss of 5,653 in the combined republican-progressive vote. The democratic vote shows a loss of 2,939 from the Bryan vote of 1908, which was 109,401. The prohibitionists polled 11,107 four years ago, and lost 3,221 this time. The only gain was made by the socialists, who gave Debs 14,527 votes last time, and increased it 12,978 in the recent election.

NO INDICTMENTS

Investigation of Sales of North Dakota Publication Not Brought Before Winona Grand Jury.

Winona.—Although the postal inspectors who worked up the case which brought about the indictment of the publishers of Jim Jam Jems, a monthly publication, on twenty-six counts at Fargo, N. D., were in Winona when the grand jury in the federal court convened in the November term, it is understood the case received no further consideration here.

The indication that no consideration was given the case here is strengthened by the fact that the jury was in session only two and one-half hours before submitting a sealed report and adjourning. It is said several matters of minor moment had received consideration.

Those connected with the Jim Jam Jems case admit that they have been investigating the connection of the newsdealers with the publishers, but say this is establishing a link in strengthening the case against the publishers arrested November 9. However, it is rumored, if the publishers are convicted in the trial next April, the government may proceed against the newsdealers.

Old Mill Burns.

Minneapolis. — One of the oldest sawmills in the city, formerly known as the Acme mill, owned by the Itasca Lumber company, was completely destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of roughly estimated at $10,000, $6,000 of which is covered by insurance. The old mill, according to F. C. Gerhard, treasurer and general manager of the company, has sawed more lumber than any other mill in the United States, the amount

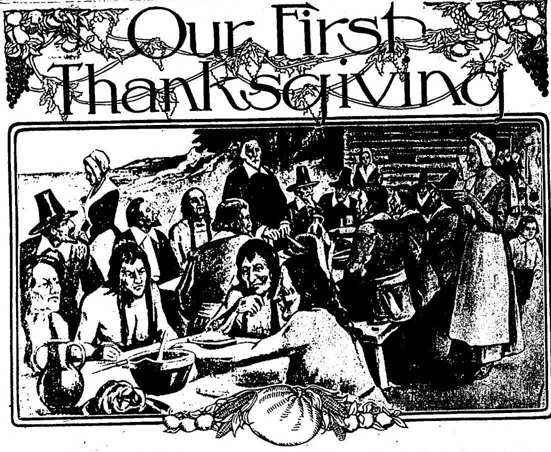
Our First Thanksgiving



THANKSGIVING day as it is now celebrated is a composite of the ancient Harvest festival, whose origins go back to the dim pre-historic beginnings of civilization, and of the solemn Puritan religious ceremony of thanksgiving. The joyous celebration of the gathering of the year's harvest, a day or week of feasting, song, dance and revel, is found in all ages and among all peoples. Thanksgiving days are also common to all religions, past and present, but they were not regular or periodical events—occurring generally after some victory of war. The Puritans and the Pilgrims brought with them from England both the Harvest festival and the Thanksgiving days, the latter being observed whenever the deeply religious mind of the Puritan saw in their prosperity or good fortune the direct intervention of Providence. The Puritan also stripped the ancient Harvest festival of much of its rude license that had grown up around the celebration in England, and gradually through the two centuries following the settlement of New England, there grew up the practice of combining the two events and making the Thanksgiving annual. The religious element has been greatly subordinated as the years passed until at the present time it is to a majority of Americans only an incident that by many is observed only in the breach.

To the stern old Puritan of almost three centuries ago, the Thanksgiving day of 1912 would seem little less than sacrilege so far as the thinksgiving feature of it is concerned. But he would understand and appreciate the day's feasting and revel as a part of the celebration of the Harvest festival. The difference is apparent in the records of the early settlement of America. The first thanksgiving service held in North America was observed with religious ceremonies conducted by an English minister in the year 1578 on the shores of Newfoundland. This clergyman, accompanied the expedition under Frobisher, who settled the first English colony in America. The records of this significant day have been preserved in the quaint rules and regulations of the expedition as follows:

"In primus: To banish swearing, dice and card playing, and filthy communication, and to serve God twice a day with the ordinary service of the Church of England. On Monday morning, May 27, 1578, aboard the Ayde, we received all, the communication by the minister of Gravesend, prepared as good Christians toward God, and resolute men for all fortunes; . . . and Maister Wolfall made unto us a goodlye sermon, exhorting all especially to be thankful to God for His strange and marvelous deliverance in those dangerous places."

The second record of a thanksgiving service in America is that of the Popham colony which settled at Sagadahoc on the Maine coast in 1607. It consisted of prayer and sermon as in the first instance. These were thanksgiving days pure and simple, and after the settlement of Plymouth many others of a similarly solemn religious nature occurred.

The first Harvest festival held in America was upon December 13, 1621. It has been called, wrongly, the first autumnal thanksgiving held in America, but it was in reality the observance of the Harvest festival, with which the settlers had been acquainted in England. It was not a day set apart for religious worship and it is not likely that any religious service was held; on the contrary, it was the beginning of a whole week of festivity in celebration of the successful garnering of their first harvest in their new home. Qaintly does "Mourt's Relation" chronicle the event:

"Our harvest being gotten in, our Governour sent foure men on fowling, that so we might after a more speciall manner rejoyce together, after we had gathered the fruit of our labours; they foure in one day killed as much fowle, as with a little helpe beside, served the Company almost a weeke, at which time amongst other Recreations, we exercised our Armes, many of the Indians coming amongst us, and amongst the rest their greatest King Massasoyt, with some ninetie men, whom for three dayes we entertained and feasted, and they went out and killed Deere, which they brought to the plantation and bestowed upon the Captaine, and others. And although it be not alwayes so plentiful, as it was at this time with us, yet by the goodnesse of God, we are so farre from want, that we often wish you partakers of our plentie."

While the bill of fare of this first American celebration of the Harvest festival has not been preserved the feast was no doubt a royal one even if some of the food and the methods of preparation would seem strange and outlandish to present day Americans. The provisions must have been bountiful for there were about 140 persons including the 90 of Massasoit's company who were entertained for three days, and all had their share of supplies. From other sources we know that the foods of the sea were abundant and that the Pilgrims had made the acquaintance of the oyster. Ducks they had in plenty of the choicest species and also geese. Game, from grouse to venison, was brought in from the forest in abundance, and there was a "great store" of wild turkeys. Barley loaf and cakes of corn meal were highly prized by the colonists and played their part in the feast. For vegetables the Pilgrims had much the same as they had in England, Gov. Bradford's list naming beans, pease, parsnips, carrots, turnips, onions, melons, cucumbers, radishes. "skirrets," beets, coleworts, and cabbages, in addition to wheat, rye, barley and oats. Besides these they had the indigeous squash and pumpkin, and it may be taken for granted that a careful Pilgrim housewife had preserved during the summer by drying a quantity of strawberries, gooseberries and "raspis." Take it altogether, the food basis of the first Harvest Thanksgiving day celebration in America was much the same as today.

But if the good housewife of today was obliged to prepare the thanksgiving feast with the utensils and inconveniences of the kitchen of three centures ago she probably would throw up her hands in hopeless despair. The kitchen with its great glowing fireplace was the housewife's domain and the general living room of the entire family. The walls and the floor were bare and the furniture meager and comfortless, while the kitchen furnishings were odd and strange. It was in this great cavernous chimney that the Pilgrim wife cooked her thanksgiving dinner. Placed high up in the yawning chimney was the heavy backbar, or lug-hole, of green wood, afterwards displaced by the great iron crane. It was beyond reach of the flames, and from it hung a motley collection of hooks of various lengths and weights. They had many different names, such as pot-hooks, pot-hangles, pot-claws, pot-cleps, trammels, crooks, hakes, gallow-balke, words that would puzzle a housewife of today to define. From these were suspended the pots and kettles in which the food was cooked. At both sides of the fireplace were large ovens in which baking and roasting were done.

There were no tin utensils in those old days and brass kettles were worth $15 a piece. The utensils were mostly of iron, wood, pewter or lattern ware. Glassware was practically unknown and bottles were made of leather. Wood played a great part in kitchen and tableware. Wooden trenchers from which two ate were used on the table for a century after the settlement at Plymouth. Wood was also used for pans and bread troughs and a host of other things displaced by tin in the modern kitchen. Of wood were made butter paddles, salt cellars, noggins, keelers, rundlets, and many kinds of drinking bowls which were known under the names of mazers, whiskins, piggins, tankards and kannes, words many of which have disappeared from use.

The dining table of these old days was the old Anglo-Saxon board placed on trestles, and the tablecloth was known as the "board cloth." Thus we have the origin of the time-worn phrase: "Gather around the festive board." And the furnishings of the "board" were simple, inventories of that period mentioning only cups, chafing dishes, chargers, threnchers, salt cellars, knives and spoons. The table fork was an innovation not yet in general use; the fingers of the eater were used to thrust the food into the mouth. The spoons were of wood and pewter mostly. Silver spoons were rare. There was no chinaware on the tables of the early thanksgiving feasts; for no chinaware came over on the Mayflower. That and the lack of glassware and silver would make a thanksgiving table of the seventeenth century look impossible to a housewife of today. Complete the picture by imagining large trenchers, square blocks of wood hollowed out by hand, placed around the "board" from each of which two people dig their food out with their fingers, and you have an idea of the manner in which our ancestors celebrated Thanksgiving three centuries ago.

But if the kitchen and table furniture would appear strange to a housewife of today some of the dishes served would appear even stranger. How many housekeepers of today can cook "suppawn" and "samp" from corn meal? Or bake manchet, simmels, cracknels, jannacks, cocket bread, cheat loaves, or "wasel" bread?

The colonists did not take kindly at first to the pumpkin, which in the pie form has become a distinctive feature of the modern thanksgiving feast. They called them "pomions" then, and this is awe-inspiring recipe from which the colonial housewife made "pompion" pie:

"Take a half pound of Pumpion and slice it, a handful of Tyme, a little Rosemary, Parsley and sweet Marjoram slipped off the stalks, then the cinnamon, nutmeg and pepper, and six cloves, and beat them. Then mix them and beat them together and put in as much sugar as you see fit; then fry them like a froiz. After it is fried let it stand until it be cold. Take sliced apples, thinne rounde ways, and lay a row of the froize and a layer of apples with currents betwixt the layer while your pie is fitted, and put in a good deal of sueet butter before you close it. When the pie is baked take six yolks of eggs, some white wine or Vergis and make a caudle of this, but not too thick. Cut up the lid and put it in. Stir them well together whilst the eggs and the pompions be not perceived and serve it up."

Thus saith the old cook book, and the modern housewife who faithfully follows this recipe can have at least a unique concoction, fearfully and wonderfully made, to grace her Thanksgiving table.

THANKSGIVING

By AMELIA E. BARR.

"Have you cut the wheat in the blowing field.,
The barley, the oats, and the rye,
The golden corn and the pearly rice?
For the winter days are nigh."
"We have reaped them all from shore to shore,
And the grain is safe on the threshing floor."

"Have you gathered the berries from the vine,
And the fruit from the orchard trees?
The dew and the scent from the roses and thyme,
In the hive of the honey bees?"
"The peach and the plum and the apple are ours,
And the honeycomb from the scented flowers."

"The wealth of the snowy cotton field
And the gift of the sugar cane,
The savory herb and the nourishing root—
There has nothing been given in vain."
"We have gathered the harvest from shore to shore,
And the measure is full and brimming o'er."

Then lift up the head with a song!
And lift up the hand with a gift!
To the ancient Giver of all
The spirit in gratitude lift!
For the joy and the promise of spring,
For the hay and the clover sweet,
The barley, the rye, and the oats,
The rice and the corn and the wheat,
The cotton and sugar and fruit,
The flowers and the fine honeycomb,
The country, so fair and so free,
The blessings and glory of home.

SURELY EASY TO UNDERSTAND

Remarkably Lucid Explanation of Murder Which Judge Is Said to Have Made to Jury.

The average juryman is not very well versed in the fine distinctions of the law. On those he needs instruction from the judge. It must have been a very obtuse juryman, however, to whom the case was not perfectly clear after listening to the following explanation by a judge:

"Gentlemen," he stated, with admirable lucidity, "murder is where a man is murderously killed. The killer in such a case is a murderer. Now, murder by poison is just as much murder as murder with a gun, pistol, or knife. It is the simple act of murdering that constitutes murder in the eye of the law. Don't let the idea of murder and manslaughter confound you. Murder is one thing; manslaughter is quite another. Consequently, if there has been a murder, and it is not manslaughter, then it must be murder. Don't let this point escape you.

"Self-murder has nothing to do with this case. According to Blackstone and other legal writers, one man cannot commit felo-de-se upon another; and this is my opinion.

"Gentlemen, murder is murder. The murder of brother is called fratricade; the murder of a father is called parricide, but that don't enter into this case. As I have said before, murder is emphatically murder.

"You will consider your verdict, gentlemen, and make up your minds according to the law and the evidence, not forgetting the explanation I have given you."

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

SOMETHING NEW IN ORGANIZED CHARITY

Before the state legislature in Albany, N. Y., this winter will be presented a plan for America's first "department of home assistance," the first organized government bureau to care for the destitute home. More than a generation ago governmental aid for the families of the very poor was abandoned in New York city; living conditions—and living's cost—have changed radically since then; today the specially appointed committee of investigation for the city conference of charities and correction urges governmental aid as the only hope of real "social justice" and livable support for the homes of the destitute. There are hundreds of women and children starving in New York for whom only the government can adequately care.

"Of course it is, primarily, a matter of the cost of living," said O. F. Lewis, chairman of the conference committee on governmental aid of New York city. "The price of the necessities of life has increased so much that destitution has become a problem too great for the private societies to meet alone. I have no doubt that the private charitable organizations could take care of the destitute families if they only had enough money; but under present conditions they have not enough money; and so something else must be done—something else must be added.

"What we are suggesting is something absolutely new. But it is simply the outgrowth of present conditions. It is a question that has 'broken through' many times lately in various parts of the United States; here in New York we are first bringing it to the point of definite, organized action."

The suggestion of a department of home assistance has as its single object the care of destitute widows with little children. Under the present regime in the care of the poor a woman with children—and no means of support—must either be taken care of by a private organization, or must break up her home and send her children to an institution.

AMIR OF AFGHANISTAN HELPS TURKEY

The specter of a holy war is unfolding itself before the eyes of Europe.

It began when Italy clashed with Turkey in Africa, and now that the little Christian states, that act as a buffer between the larger powers and Turkey, are at war, the cloud is darkening rapidly among all the Mohammedan nations.

In the mosques of India, the pagodas of Malaysia and the shrines of a dozen other nations prayers are being said for the success of the Turkish arms.

All Islam has thrown its religious support to the kahlifate at Constantinople, and should the sultan, as head of the Moslem faith, unfurl the green flag of the prophet it is feared the fanatic Mohammedan nations would begin holy wars.

Even the most conservative of European diplomats admit there is a possibility of political alliances between Turkey and other Islamic nations. The Russian persecutions in Persia have fired the Mohammedans there, and the Asiatic Moslems are looking for a champion who can come to the rescue of the threatened Islamic states—Turkey and Persia.

Habibullah Khan, Amir of Afghanistan, is the man. One word from him, alarmists say and others fear, will bring on a series of religious clashes that will entangle every nation in Europe, Asia and Africa.

The amir has not failed to take advantage of the almost universal manifestation of respect paid him, and in a meeting held in Kabul recently to express sympathy with the Turks he spoke in no uncertain manner.

Although the sovereign of a comparatively small state, the Amir Habibullah enjoys the prestige of being the only independent Moslem ruler in the world. His country has no public debt with a foreign commission controlling its finances. It has a respectable and fairly well trained army. It manufactures its own rifles, ammunition and guns of the smaller calibers.

MRS. GROVER CLEVELAND TO WED AGAIN

Mrs. Grover Cleveland, widow of the former president of the United States, is to be married next April to Prof. Thomas Preston, an honorary professor at Princeton University and now occupying the chair of archaeology at Wells College, Aurora, N. Y., the institution attended by Mrs. Cleveland, then Frances Folsom.

Although formal announcement has not been made and probably will not be made until after the debut of Miss Esther Cleveland this winter, the fact of the engagement has been known for some time among the intimate friends of Mrs. Cleveland and Professor Preston.

The second romance of the womnn who as "the bride of the White House" charmed a nation and whose high character and devotion to her distinguished husband have been, by example, a national influence toward high ideals of wifehood, is the outcome of an acquaintanceship of little more than a year's duration, with a man practically unknown in America.

Thereafter he became a frequent visitor at the Cleveland home in Princeton, and undoubtedly Mrs. Cleveland's ardent interest in education fostered the first bond of sympathy that grew into stronger attachment, and has resulted in the most interesting announcement of a betrothal since the world heard that the beautiful Frances Folsom was to be married to the nation's chief in the stately walls of the White House.

Professor Preston, who is about fifty years of age, a literary scholar and a linguist of international distinction, is a man of strong but retiring personality, and, although he has held a high place among the faculty of Princeton for years, it is said that his first meeting with Mrs. Cleveland took place not many months ago.

PRINCESS NURSING WOUNDED SOLDIERS

According to press reports from Greece, the hospital arrangements of the Greek army are entirely inadequate for emergencies. The army has acted with such rapidity that it is impossible for the field ambulances to keep pace with it. Princess Alice, wife of Prince Andrew, the fourth son of King George, with a staff of picked nurses, is following the army and rendering first aid to the wounded, by whom she is spoken of as "the ministering angel."

At Sarandoper she performed almost miracles, flitting with her staff from one quarter to another until late in the evening, when she was compelled to stop because her clothing was drenched with blood.

Princess Helena, daughter of the Crown Prince, has also arrived with her hospital train.

Looking around the railroad station at Larissa, which was littered with wounded men, some on ambulances, others propped against the walls, she exclaimed in pathetic tones:

"Only three weeks to prepare for all this! It was not enough time, and this is only the beginning."

TO PROBE DEATHS

U. S. Will Investigate Killing of Chinese Girl Infants.

Orientals Invariably Place Blame on Scorpions When Female Babies Die Suddenly—One Case Showed Fractured Skull.

Honolulu.—It is the belief of the authorities that the practice of infanticide among the Chinese of these islands is common, and vigorous measures will at once be taken by federal and local officials to determine to what extent the murder of infants among the orientals has been carried on and to bring the offenders to justice.

In fact, the first move in that direction was made when by order of United States District Attorney Breckons, Chun Kin Sut, one of the wealthiest Chinese of the territory, and his wife were arrested, charged with murder in the first degree in causing the death of their year-old girl baby. Pending further investigation the pair were released upon furnishing cash bail of $25,000 and $15,000, respectively.

The story of Chun Kin Sut and his wife is that the little one was bitten by a scorpion, that they did not know the cause of the child's illness, and that they were surprised when she died in convulsions. A coroner's inquest, however, revealed a fractured skull and an examination of the supposed scorpion proved that it belonged to a non-poisonous class.

The scorpion bite story has long been a favorite one with the orientals when they have been called upon to account for the death of a female child, and in the past it has been reluctantly accepted by the police. In a majority of cases the suspected parents have been able to produce a venomous spider of some description as corroborative evidence and the authorities have been balked in any contemplated criminal procedure.

United States Attorney Breckons has been keeping a close watch upon the vital statistics and he now denow declares that he will put an end to the killing of girl babies among the Chinese. To this end he has called not only the men of his own office to the work of careful investigation, but has invited Chief Detective McDuffie of the Honolulu police to place his best men upon the work, with promise of liberal federal reward.

In addition County Attorney Cathcart and City Prosecutor Brown, acting upon advice of Territorial Attorney-General Lindsay, will investigate the mysteries of the large mortality among Chinese infants. That seven girl babies die to one boy baby is in itself a significant fact, but the proving of the causes of death is, according to the police, quite another matter.

Section of Picturesque Hawaii.

A number of federal secret service men are now said to be working under the direction of Mr. Breckons upon orders from Washington. It has been learned that two of them are looking for a certain Hawaiian of the island of Maui, who, it is said, has been the indirect meons of causing the death of many Chinese children by supplying gray scorpions to his Honolulu patrons.

BUYS FLOWERS; IS DISOWNED

Why Kansas City Man Sues for Share of Fortune—Sister in Same Boat.

Kansas City, Mo.—When Mrs. Goldie Cole of Carroll county, Missouri, visited Kansas City several years ago her brother, William A. Whiteley, a hotel clerk, took her to a theater in a carriage. He also gave her a bunch of roses. Because of this extravagance neither of them was remembered in the division of the estate of their millionaire grandfather, Abner Whiteley of Kansas City. Suit was filed by Mrs. Cole and Whiteley here to set aside deeds to the property the grandfather left other heirs and asking that they receive an eighth of the estate.

When a young man, Abner Whiteley came from Ohio, and on part of the trip lived upon hazel nuts. By hard work he became wealthy, his estate being estimated at $1,000,000. He made it a rule never to pay more than 25 cents for a meal or for a night's lodging. When the grandfather heard of his granddaughter's visit and the theater trip in which the carriage and roses figured he called it "unwarranted and sinful extravagance" and declared neither should enjoy any part of his property.

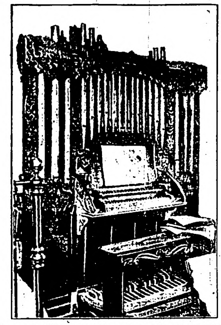
CROSS-FIRE BALL HITS MARK

Negro's Head Needs Doctor's Aid at the Firemen's Carnival—Baseball Player Is Good Marksman.

Newark, Del.—Thomas Truxton, colored, the principal actor in the amusement of throwing baseballs at a negro's head at the firemen's carnival, caused that part of the carnival to suspend operations when he failed to pull his padded head through the canvas in time. A cross-fire delivery from a Newark baseball player landed on Truxton's mouth and the negro had to be taken to the office of Dr. H. G. M. Kollock for repairs.

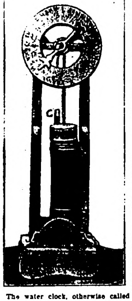
Things Queer and Curious

Organ Made With Knife Only



Way back in 1889 Robert Smith, a miner of Cramlington, England, decided that he wanted an organ, so he set to work to make one in his leisure time and it has just been completed. The instrument was made with a pocket knife as the only tool and is a wonderful example of what a skillful and patient man can accomplish. The woodwork is mostly well seasoned oak.

CLEPSYDRA OR WATER CLOCK



The water clock, otherwise called a clepsydra, here illustrated, was made in 1639 and stands 33 inches high. The brass dial is nine inches in diameter, and is divided into twenty-four hours, the period the water flows The signs of the Zodiac are also quaintly engraved on it. A is a brass cylinder filled with water, which is allowed to escape, drop by drop, through a small tap fixed near the bottom of A, and which can be regulated. B is a copper float, which rests on the surface of the water and sinks with it. It is kept steady by C, a counterpoise, to which it is attached by a chain, which passes over the pulley (D), upon which the hand (E) is fixed as the water sinks in A. B falls, and thus raises C, which causes E to move round the dial and indicate the time, which it does with accuracy. A has to be filled every twenty-four hours. On the brass vessel marked F, into which the water drains, is engraved: "Tyme is Short. G. Knight of ye Towne Ipswich, 1639," and below his coat of arms and crest.

PECULIARITIES OF ANIMALS

Tortoises and turtles have no teeth.

Both mandibles of the parrot's beak are movables, but most birds are able to move only one.

The horse has no eyebrows. The appearance of much white in the eye of a horse indicates a vicious nature.

The stork is partial to kittens as an article of food, and the cats reciprocate by a love for young storks.

The frog, owing to its peculiar structure, cannot breathe with the mouth open, and if it were forcibly kept open the animal would die of suffocation.

Whalebone is found in the mouth of the whalebone whale, where it forms the substitute for the teeth, of which otherwise the animal is destitute.

Pigs are poor swimmers, their forelegs being set closely under them, and when they fall into the water they sometimes cut their throats with the sharp points of their cloven feet.

The eyes of hares are never closed, as they are unprovided with eyelids. Instead thereof they have a thin membrane which covers the eye when asleep, and probably also when at rest.

The deer is furnished with supplementary breathing places in addition to the nostrils, and this would appear to be an extraordinary provision of nature giving the beast of the chase a freer respiration.

Fishes swallow their food hastily and without mastication, because they are obliged unceasingly to open and close the jaws for the purpose of respiration and cannot long retain food in the mouth when quite shut.

The hump on the back of the dromedary is an accumulation of a peculiar species of fat, which is a store of nourishment beneficently provided against the day of fasting.

DIVORCE IN VARIOUS LANDS

In Hindostan either party for a slight cause may leave the other and marry.

In the olden times the Jews had a discretionary power of divorcing their wives.

Divorces are scarcely allowed in Thibet, unless with the consent of both parties. Remarriage is forbidden.

In Cochin China the parties desiring divorce break a pair of chopsticks in the presence of witnesses and the thing is done.

If the wife of a Turkoman asks his permission to go out and he says "go," without adding, "come back again," they are divorced.

In Siberia, if a man is dissatisfied with the most trifling acts of his wife, he tears a cap or veil from her face and that constitutes a divorce.

In Siam the first wife may be divorced but not sold, as the others may be. She may claim the first child. The others belong to the husband.

Among the Moors, if the wife does not become the mother of a boy, she may be divorced with the consent of the tribe and can marry again.

In the Arctic region, a man who wants a divorce leaves home in anger and does not return for several days. The wife takes the hint and departs.

WALKS TEN MILES IN SLEEP

Mary Ruth Smith of Clinton, Mo., eleven-year-old daughter of a physician, left her bed at 11 o'clock and, clad only in her night robe and her mother's coat, walked in her sleep barefoot over ten miles of rough and muddy country roads to the home of her uncle, Walter Waugh, at Norris. At daylight Mr. Waugh found her shivering on his front porch. She was unable to recall how she got there, but said she dreamed of wanting to go to her uncle's home.

BOY ANGLER HOOKS WATCH

While fishing in the Truckee river, near Reno, Nev., Neil West, aged twelve, saw something shining in the river bed and by deft use of his hook brought up a 17-jeweled heavy silver watch.

CIVIL WAR SHELLS IN TREES

The last battle of the Civil war of any importance was that in April, 1865, at Bentonville, Johnston county, twenty-five miles from Raleigh, N. C. To this day many trees of large size, notably the pines, show the effect of cannon fire and in some cases of the extremely hot musketry fire.

Albert Ross, a farmer, recently cut some timber and burned the badly shaped portions. There was a series of explosions and the workmen fled. Shells embedded in the wood had exploded and fragments were hurled in all directions.

For years sawmill men have been very careful about handling the timber from this section, because saws have been almost ruined by striking embedded bullets.

General Sherman declared that at Bentonville he received the greatest setback on his famous march through Georgia and the Carolinas.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE RAT

Rats are natives of Asia, and their raids westward belong to comparatively modern times. The little animal was unknown in ancient Europe.

The black rat first came to Europe from Asia in the sixteenth century, and about the beginning of the seventeenth or the ending of the sixteenth century he arrived in America. This black rat was the common house rat until the brown or gray rat made his appearance in 1775.

The gray rat came to Europe from India by way of Russia, and is now known as the Norway rat from a mistaken tradition that it came from Norway to England and from the latter country to America.

SAVES CHILD BY BOLD LEAP

Leaping from a moving locomotive into a stream at the side of the railroad track, Fireman Frank Ball, employed on an Erie switch engine at Passaic, N. J., rescued four-year-old Molly Romar, who had fallen into the Dundee canal. While playing on the bank the girl lost her balance and fell in. Fireman Ball saw the youngster fall into the water as his engine drew near. He leaped into the stream and with a few powerful strokes reached the side of the child.

SNAKE WHICH SPITS POISON

The ring-halys, here shown, is a South American snake which should be given a wide berth. It can eject its venom to a distance of three yards, and is an unpleasant reptile even in captivity.

LENGTHENED BY LIGHTNING

George D. Pittman, a rancher, who was struck by lightning near Wilcox, Ariz., measured five feet eight inches in height before death and six feet afterward. His vertebrae were uncoupled by the shock. Pittman's hair was singed at the back of the neck, where the bolt entered. His neck was broken and shoulders crushed.

KILL THEIR MULE FOR DEER

Two young business men, John Nickols and Gabriel Murphy, stalked the brown mule they drove on a hunting trip in the Greenhorn country, Colorado, for three hours, then shot it for a deer and were compelled to tramp thirty-five miles into Walsenburg.

For Those Drowned at Sea

On All Souls' day there is always a special service in the church at Gunwalloe, Cornwall, for the souls of those who have been drowned at sea, and then the priest and people march to the shore with lighted candles and with flowers which are thrown into the sea. This picturesque ceremony attracts many visitors.

Around Thanksgiving Time

by MARGARET E. SANGSTER

PUMPKINS FOR THANKSGIVING

GATHERING THE CRANBERRIES

PREPARING TURKEYS FOR MARKET

THE household year, like the year of the nation, has its red-letter days and its joyous anniversaries. Around Thanksgiving the sweetest associations of the home and the tenderest memories of the nation meet and cluster. Do you ever stop to think how new this country is? Should you go to Rome you would find more old walls and monuments and buildings that have been standing for centuries, and still testify to the past splendor of the once imperial city. Crossing the Atlantic and setting foot on the shores of England, the past greets you on every hand. You are immediately made aware that our friends across the water are living among old traditions, while in their ceremonials, as when a king was crowned with his queen at his side, they are keeping up the customs and recalling the grandeur that have been theirs for a thousand years.

Over here, in comparison with other nations on the globe, we are still in our childhood and can hardly be said to have more than reached the beginning of our maturity. Yet we have eighty million people, and we jostle when we walk on the street people who have sought us from the far east, from the islands of the ocean, from northern and southern Europe, and, indeed, from everywhere beneath the sun. To my mind there is something wonderful and significant and heart-stirring in the thought that a man of our choice in Washington in the White House presides as our chief executive over our vast territory and our mighty mass of citizens. He sends out word in November, and lo! the whole commonwealth listens and obeys. By one consent Americans, native-born and adopted into our ranks from abroad, cease from business, observe a holiday and thank God on the last Thursday of November. Everyone does not go to church, but the churches are open. There are services, there is exquisite music and eloquent sermons are preached, and the nation is thus uplifted to a higher plane, and there is an obvious reminder that we owe thanks to our Creator and praise to our Father in heaven.

Another charming feature of this peculiarly popular and wholly American holiday is the assembling of families around the Thanksgiving dinner table. Again look back, not over a thousand years, but over very nearly three hundred, and you will see how significant was the origin of this annual jubilee. In 1621 Governor Bradford of Massachusetts issued a proclamation to the little colony setting apart a day of Thanksgiving for the first in-gathering harvests. Should you ever go to Plymouth, Mass., and stroll through the old graveyard there, tears would spring to your eyes even now when you saw by the records on the stones that Death was very busy in reaping the first harvest of life in New England. These hardy pioneers who came to our bleak Atlantic coast that they might have freedom to worship God as they chose, were made of stuff too strong to be daunted by illness, want, famine or death. The attacks of hostile Indians in the night did not turn them from their purpose of settling in the new country, and women and men alike were heroic in their scorn of peril and their determination to snatch success from apparent defeat. The first harvest was scanty, but they assembled in church and thanked God for it, and in their homes they sat down to the best dinner they could provide. The wild turkey furnished the meat for the feast. This American bird is always the piece de resistance at a Thanksgiving dinner. The domestic bird retains some traits of primitive wildness and, as every farmer's wife knows, is prone to wander away, and travels, by preference, in a flock.

Still looking back, we discover that after 1621 other colonies followed the example of Massachusetts. After the Revolution the governors of various states issued proclamations as Governor Bradford had done. But it was not until 1863 that the day became national. It was then that the president proclaimed a general thanksgiving, and this good custom has been followed until the present year.

The old homestead is the rallying place for its sons and daughters, if they have been scattered far afield in pursuit of business or pleasure. They make an effort to return to the loved ones there and no triumph of a Parisian chef or art of the finest cookery has quite the taste of mother's pumpkin pie. Thanksgiving dinners may be eaten in hotels and boarding houses and on shipboard by enthusiastic Americans, and in city homes where cousins, aunts and uncles shake hands and sit together at the meal, but they are best when they are given beneath the roof where once the children played.

In comparison with that first harvest and that first Thanksgiving, let us glance, shall we say, at the markets of America in 1911. Fruits have been gathered from the orchards of Oregon, Michigan, California, Connecticut, Florida, and from too many localities and states for enumeration here. Think of the peaches, grapes, apples, plums, cherries, pears, oranges and bananas that the great country produces. We are learning how to assist nature by scientific processes in farming so that annually our orchards and vineyards are competing with our mines of coal, silver and copper as sources of wealth. Our grains, wheat, oats, rye, rice and Indian corn yield us enough to feed our own people and replenish the exhaustion of other lands. When the crops are abundant there is rejoicing from coast to coast. The farmers have many things to contend with. Sometimes there is a plague of grasshoppers or of locusts, sometimes there is drought, and again there are floods, but, on the whole, from year's end to year's end, the soil gives back in Divine multiplication the seed which the human hand has sown. We cannot sit down at the simplest Thanksgiving dinner without seeing upon it contributions from every section of our big republic.

As women and girls are the true homemakers, it is well for them to take a sincere and intelligent interest in the affairs of their country. Men seldom rise higher in goodness, frankness and patriotism than the women whose influence over them tends to purity, bravery and truth. We ought to care about the politics of our country. When we thank God for peace, we ought to be additionally grateful that the menace of war has been swept out of sight by the wise leadership in our councils of state. When we thank God for schools and for freedom of speech and an untrammeled press and good books that are as plentiful as autumn leaves, we should again remind ourselves and the children around us that we owe these tokens of advanced civilization to our republican government and to the goodness and guardian care of Jehovah, who has given us "dominion over palm and pine."

Another word may be in order. Why should we compress our Thanksgiving into one day? Why not be thankful all the time for the little things as for the great ones, and most of all for the dear ones of hearth and home?

Home Influence Upon Child

Thought From Jane Addams Which Demonstrates Its Lasting Effect Is Worth Consideration.

A mother croons an old-time song as she toils. A father speaks kindly as home from work he crosses the threshold which leads to wife and rest from labor. The child—the stepping stone between mother and father, the connecting link—hears both song and gentle word.

The father, still toil stained, whether he comes from field or shop, stoops to kiss the mother, also toil stained. He speaks softly, mayhap:

"Howdy, sweetheart; glad to be home again."

She turns a sweat-marked face up to his, in farmhouse or tenement, and answers:

"I'm glad to have you home."

Of all this the child is the witness. Things of the world are yet new and strange to it. Mysteries still confront it. Guiding stars it is searching for, and lo, in the very greetings of mother and father, in their own loving attitude toward each other, this undeveloped life finds a star.

Such is the influence of environment of two personalities—that of father and mother—upon the questioning child, blood of their blood and flesh of their flesh. How powerful, how everlasting, when between mother and father, patience, self-consideration, forbearance and forgiving are always kept uppermost in the mind!

If, on the other hand, the child must see in daily home life impatience, selfishness; hear hasty or angry words, from those whom it knows long before it understands the law of city, county, state, or nation, what contempt must naturally grow in its heart for those things that make for the best of life—law and order, gentleness of speech, regard and love for others, trustfulness and hopefulness.

The personal home environment of a child has much to do with its future state of mind as to respect for work, law and humanity.

Advice to Alpine Climbers.

In the earlier part of the nineteenth century many even of those who had been up Alpine peaks themselves denounced the sport. Regarding the ascent of Mount Blanc, Murray's Handbook in the year 1838 stated that "all who have succeeded have advised no one to attempt it," and nearly 20 years later noted the "remarkable fact that a large proportion of those who have made this ascent have been persons of unsound mind."

KEEPING DOWN HUMAN SUPPLY

For some time the doctors have been skirmishing about the idea of creating life artificially, Life remarks. The latest reports from Europe indicate that this is now an assured fact and the manufacture of life will doubtless soon be placed upon a commercial basis.

We cannot but regard this as a great calamity. The tariff, the increase in gold and many other causes have been assigned. The real cause, however, is that there are too many people. There is an overproduction in human beings. Until we can cut this down we shall be increasingly embarrassed by the cost of living.

Instead of adding to the possibility of creating life, therefore, we should seek some means to curtail it. Besides, everybody that is born now wants to be of some consequence. Every man would be king and every woman queen.

Unless we can keep down the total supply of human beings there is trouble ahead.

HOW HE LANDED THE FISH

Expert Angler Saw Situation and With True Genius Seized the Opportunity.

"Bob Esam stood six feet six in his socks, lived in the mountains of West Virginia and kept a pack of 40 hounds," said a New York angler. "He was not only a mighty hunter, but an expert and resourceful fisherman.

"While he was out on the back prong of Glady with a party of tourists they noticed the trout leaping out of the water after a reddish fly, and not one of them had any fishing tackle. While searching in his pockets for tackle Esam discovered a rubber band around a wallet. He removed it and cut it so that he had a piece of elastic about six inches long.

"He then cut a small strip from his red flannel shirt about the size of the fly the trout were rising for and tied it to one end of the elastic. The other end he attached to a pole which he drove into the bank of the stream, so that the red flannel bait hung out over and about a foot above the water. This done he got back behind a tree where the trout could not see him.

"Presently a trout rose to that flannel decoy, grabbed it, and to his astonishment its teeth became entangled in the flannel and he was flipped out on the bank—and that thing kept flipping trout out until there were none left in that pool, but there were, so Bob said, 69 on the bank by actual count."—New York Sun.

The jury was hearing the closing arguments in a damage suit before Judge Ben M. Smith, in which slander was alleged. The attorney for the plaintiff had been directing his broadsides against the defendant for his show of ingratitude, when the latter's counsel objected.

"Gratitude is inspiring but is not a constitutional requirement," interposed the objector, who had borrowed several law books from the other lawyer some time before.

"One look at your face convinces me that you are right," said the first lawyer. "If gratitude were a constitutional requirement you couldn't be a citizen."—Chicago Evening Post.

A PENALTY OF AGE

The tendency of advancing years to restrict activity and exercise is responsible for the constipated condition of most elderly people. The wear of years impairs the action of the bowels and the digestive organs are more sensitive to the demands upon them and rebel more quickly. Cathartics and purgatives are violent and drastic in their action and should not be used to correct constipation. A mild, yet positively effective remedy, and one that is recommended by physicians as well as by thousands who have used it, is the compound of simple laxative herbs with pepsin prescribed by Dr. W. B. Caldwell over thirty years ago and now sold by druggists everywhere under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Dr. Caldwell wants everyone troubled with constipation to try Syrup Pepsin and will send a trial bottle, free of charge, to all who write for it. Address Dr. W. B. RASH SPREAD TO ARMS

759 Roach Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.—"At first I noticed small eruptions on my face. The trouble began as a rash. It looked like red pimples. In a few days they spread to my arms and back. They itched and burned so badly that I scratched them and of course the result was blood and matter. The eruptions festered, broke, opened and dried up, leaving the skin dry and scaly. I spent many sleepless nights, my back, arms and face burning and itching; sleep was purely and simply out of the question. The trouble also caused disfigurement. My clothing irritated the breaking out.

"By this time I had used several well-known remedies without success. The trouble continued. Then I began to use the sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Within seven or eight days I noticed gratifying results. I purchased a full-sized cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment and in about eighteen or twenty days my cure was complete." The good road amendment to the state constitution has been adopted. The seven senator amendment has been killed. The other amendments have not been reported.

The 1 mill road tax and the bill increasing the railroads' gross earnings tax from 4 to 5 per cent were the only constitutional amendments which prevailed at the recent election. A compilation of returns by the secretary of state shows that all others failed.

Extra Session, or Not

President-elect Wilson is receiving a variety and an abundance of advice on the question of whether or not he should call an extra session to revise the tariff.

There is but one point to be considered, and Governor Wilson's decision will, we feel assured, be based on his judgment as to that point. It is this: What is best for the good of the whole country?

That it is best for the country that the tariff be revised and that special privilege be cut out of the tariff schedules is admitted. The people have just recorded that judgment overwhelmingly. The only question is when it is to be done.

Those who favor delay until the regular session in December, 1914, argue that by that time the business revival will be so far advanced that the country will be in better position to withstand the disturbance of a tariff revision; session that many of the members of congress are new, and should be given more time to study this question; that more time should be taken for a study of the schedules in the existing law.

Those who favor the extra session argue that so long as tariff revision must come the sooner it is disposed of the better all around; that there may be more or less business apprehension about the effect of the revision, and that, because of this, unnecessary delay may lend a timidity to business venturing that would not exist if the tariff were disposed of for a long time to come; that it is better to have the revision done and over with and to give business a chance as soon as possible to adjust itself to the new conditions.

Whether there is, therefore, argument on both sides, on the whole it seems to us that the weight of argument decidedly is in favor of an extra session as soon as possible after March 4. There is a work to be done, and it needs doing very much. There must be more or less uncertainty until it is done. Therefore the sooner it can be done the better for business, the better for the country as a whole.—Duluth Herald.

Creameries are Leading Factors

In his address at the recent convention of the Red River Valley Dairymen's association at Thief River Falls, Supt. C. G. Selvig of the Crookston school of agriculture, who was reelected president of the association, made some statements regarding the progress of dairying in the district embraced in the association, including Otter Tail, Hubbard, and Wilkin counties on the south, Beltrami and Clearwater counties on the east, and taking in Norman, Mahnomen, Polk, Marshall, Kittson, Roseau, Red Lake, and Pennington counties, which have aroused a great deal of interest. This territory embraces one-sixth of the farms of the state, with one-third of the acreage of the state, and supports one-ninth of the state's population. In this territory are one-seventh of the cattle of the state, one-sixth of the horses, one-nineteenth of the swine, one-seventh of the sheep, and one-ninth of the poultry. The same territory raises one-thirty-seventh of the corn, one-fourth of the oats, one-third of the wheat, one-fifth of the barley and potatoes of the entire state.

Within this territory, from the period from 1900 to 1910, there was an increase of 50 per cent in the number of cattle, nearly all dairy cattle, as compared to an increase of 25 per cent in the state as a whole. There was an increase of 47 per cent in poultry, with a state increase of but 30 per cent. The live stock increased 83 per cent in the Red River valley. The barley crop increased 156 per cent, compared to 11 per cent in the whole state, and the hay and fodder crop increased 48 per cent.

These figures secured from the official census show the great progress made since the organization of the association.

Mr. Selvig stated that in the increase in dairying remarkable progress was made in the same territory. In 1901 there were forty creameries, in 1909 there were 120, over 300 per cent increase Then there were 2,257 patrons, where there are now over 12,000.

In 1901 there were creameries in Polk, Norman, Clay, Otter Tail, Red Lake, and Becker counties only. Now every county has creameries. In 1901 Polk county creameries paid patrons $26,883 while in 1909 the sum reached $377,059. Otter Tail increased from $13,759 to $453,127, and other counties accordingly. President Selvig's plan to inaugurate record contests among individual farmers, with substantial cash premiums and publicity, is regarded as a great move of the association and is highly commended by Dairy and Food Commissioner Winkjer.

Council Proceedings

Special meeting of the village council held Nov. 20, 1912, for the purpose of acting upon the matter of advertising for bids for the sale of a $4,000.00 bond issue.

On motion duly made and carried the following resolution offered by Dr. C. Swanson and seconded by Councilman Hovet was passed:

Resolved, That the village council of the village of St. Hilaire hold a meeting at the village hall in said village on Monday, the 2nd day of December, 1912, at 8 o'clock p. m. of said day, for the purpose of opening bids for the purchase of the $4,000.00 in bonds authorized to be issued by said village at a special meeting of the qualified electors thereof held on Nov. 9, 1912; that all bids therefor shall be sealed bids and shall be filed with the village recorder of said village prior to the hour of the last aforesaid meeting of said council; that said village council reserves the right to reject any or all bids that may be offered, and that notice of said meeting of said council shall be given by the publication thereof for two successive weeks in the St. Hilaire Spectator, a weekly newspaper published in said village.

There being no further business meeting adjourned.

Wedding at Thief River Falls

One of the largest weddings of the season was solemnized last Tuesday morning at the St. Bernard Catholic church when Miss Mary Emma Moran became the bride of Mr. Ernest Bernard O'Neill. The bride was gowned in white satin, and wore a large white beaver hat, and carried bride's roses and was accompanied by her sister, Miss Rose Moran, who wore pink silk crepe and carried pink roses. Mr. Philip Bryant officiated as groomsman.

After the cermony an elaborite wedding breakfast was served at the O'Neill home. In the afternoon the happy couple left by automobile for St. Hilaire, where they later took the train for the Twin Cities. Before returning they will visit southern Minnesota and Wisconsin after which they will make their home on the O'Neill farm in this county.

The bride is a Thief River Falls girl, receiving her education in the local schools and has a wide circle of friends. The groom, Mr. O'Neil, is the son of Hon. D. P. O'Neil and is well and favorably known throughout the county. The many friends of both contracting parties join in wishing them a long and happy married life.—News-Press.

Coldly Described.

"So you don't envy any of the world's men of genius?"

"No," answered Mr. Cumrox. "I admire them, but I don't envy 'em. A genius is a man who gets a monument after he's dead instead of three square meals a day while he's living."—Washington Star.

The Family Game.

Mother (coming into the children's room)—Rosie, what are you making such a terrible noise over? Look at Hugo. See how quiet he sits there. Rosie—Yes, it's easy for him to sit quiet in the game we are playing. He is papa, who has come home late, and I am—you.—Wiener Salonwitzblatt.

Equally Ignorant.

The author of "Reminiscences of a Country Politician" once asked a laborer in an English village how old he was.

"I be just the same age as the queen," he said. "It be either a fortnight older or a fortnight younger. I don't rightly know which, and I don't suppose her knows either."

A Witty Forlornity.

A forlorn looking man said, "I've tried everything that I could turn my hand to, but couldn't make anything answer, and now I have decided to go up among the hills, where they say there's a wonderful echo, to see if I can make that answer."

Lost His Suit

In the case of Chris Peterson vs. the Great Northern for $2550 damages as the result of injuries sustained when he was thrown from N. A. Nelson's buggy at the crossing north of the station here, breaking a leg in two places, which case was tried in Red Lake Falls last week, a verdict was returned in favor of the railroad. Peterson alleged the accident was caused by the excessive rate of speed of the train, but the company showed that the train was going but fifteen miles an hour. The rig nor occupants were not hit by the train, the horse simply becoming unmanageable.

Flood Gates on Red Lake River

Flood gates will have to be established at the source of the Red Lake river at Red lake, as a result of the extensive drainage operations carried on by the state of Minnesota.

Such is the belief of W. H. Brown of Grand Forks, who has just returned from a complete tour of the Red lake country, going there for the purpose of determining the truth of reports which have been circulated to the effect that a new outlet had been constructed, such new outlet being responsible for low water. He says no channel diverting water from its natural course has been dug. No channel could be dug and he not be able to detect it, for, because of the lay of the land, such a channel would have to be a large and deep one.

MONEY OF THE RICH.

Of More Use Foolishly Spent Than Hoarded or Lying Idle.

A great reservoir of water undistributed leaves men and women to perish of thirst and growing crops to parch and die. So also vaults bulging with stagnant money leave men and women to perish in abject poverty and ripened crops to rot within the fields and orchards that grew them. Therefore what happens to the dollars of the millionaire is a question of the first importance.

Those of us who believe in praying for material blessings will do well to pray long and earnestly that rich women will never cease to buy $100 hats and $1,000 gowns, with diamonds and other jewels to match; that they will continue to give balls and teas and entertainments of the most expensive kind; that they will be recklessly extravagant in gewgaws and folderols of every description, because it will be good for us who depend upon an income drawn from the multitude of operations involved in producing, merchandising and transporting all those gewgaws and other gimcracks that go to keep extravagance at a high pitch.

Let us hope that rich men's sons will continue to spend their fathers' money as foolishly as they are reputed to do—not because it will be good for them, but because it will be good to have the money poured into the wage earner's money channels.

Let us doubly hope that the rich men may be prospered in their money getting, because they will not let it lie idle. Whatever their wives and children do not spend they put into stocks and bonds and thereby turn it into the wage earner's money channels. Let us be thankful, too, that neither the dollars of the rich nor the dollars of the poor are of any value save as they go into the wage channels of active circulation.—F. W. Hewes in Harper's Weekly.

His Shrewd Idea.

"Who is that sour looking girl with the heavy underjaw?"

"That is the only daughter of old De Milyuns."

"And who is the dainty bit of sweetness with the blue eyes and golden hair?"

"That's the chaperon."

"What's the explanation?"

"Why, it's old De Milyun's clever idea. He thinks his Jane will be perfectly safe as long as Miss Blossom is around."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

She Murders It.

"How long is the life of the average so called popular song?"

"Till the girl who lives next door to us gets hold of it."—Houston Post.

Fatherly Advice.

"Dad," said the country youth who had just graduated from the district school, "I have long cherished a desire to go on the stage and have at last decided, with your permission, to"—

"My boy," interrupted the old granger, "all the world's a stage. You hitch the mules to the big red plow and transfer the outfit to the ten acre lot behind the barn, where you can enact the star role in that beautiful drama entitled 'Down on the Farm.'"—Chicago News.

Notice of Meeting of the Village Council of the Village of St. Hilaire

FOR THE OPENING OF BIDS FOR THE SALE OF $4,000.00 IN BONDS OF SAID VILLAGE

Notice is hereby given that there will be a meeting of the village council of the village of St. Hilaire at the village hall in said village on the 2nd day of December, 1912, at 8 o'clock p. m. of that day for the purpose of opening and considering bids for the purchase of the $4,000.00 in bonds voted to be issued by said village at a special meeting of the qualified electors thereof held on the 2nd day of November, 1912.

All bids for the purchase of such bonds must be filed with the village recorder of said village prior to the hour of the meeting of said village council aforesaid.

The village council reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

Said bonds will bear six per cent interest per annum, payable annually, and will run for 15 years from the day of the date thereof, and are issued for the purpose of refunding the floating indebtedness of said village.

Dated at St. Hilaire, Minn., this 21st day of November, 1912.

HOMEMADE ICE CREAM.

Freeze It at Least a Day Before It Is to Be Used.

"The best ice cream is stale ice cream," said the ice cream manufacturer. "You never hear of colic from ice cream among children who have never met the homemade article. It is a queer thing that it would ruin a manufacturer to sell fresh goods, whereas if you know it is homemade and just out of the freezer you will praise it to the skies as being the superior of anything manufactured anywhere.

"If you want your homemade cream to be really good and healthy make it at least a day before you use it. Churn it hard, but not too hard, and then pack it away in salted ice until you are ready to serve it. In this way all the little particles of ice which make homemade cream so gritty and really harmful will have disappeared. The cream will sort of absorb the water that forms the ice, so to speak; consequently your cream will be frozen, not frapped. It is a daring manufacturer who risks his trade by shipping cream less than a week old. Sometimes I store my goods in ice as much as two weeks. That isn't a bit too long, either, although it takes a heap of ice."—New York Press.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ninety dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due, and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by C. E. Carpenter and Ella A. Carpenter, his wife, and Geo. M. Bleecker and Mary E. Bleecker, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of St. Hilaire, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date the 10th day of June, 1910, and duly acknowledged by said mortgagors on June 27th, 1910, and with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Red Lake and state of Minnesota on the 30th day of June, 1910, at 5 o'clock p. m., in book 31 of mortgages on page 102.

Which said mortgage was after the organization and creation of Pennington county, Minnesota, duly transcribed into the records in the office of the register of deeds of said Pennington county, and recorded therein on the 23rd day of November, 1910, in book 2 of mortgages on page 232;

And Whereas, The said mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of fifteen hundred ninety and no-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum from the 10th day of June, 1912, and whereas, the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, towit: The south one-half of the southeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section two (2) in township one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-four (44) west of the fifth principal meridian, in Red Lake county, Minnesota, now a part of Pennington county, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington county at the east front door of the court house in the city of Thief River Falls in Pennington county in said state on the 30th day of December, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of fifteen hundred ninety dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. 350 D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions in banks and offices this year—had calls for over 500. All Fargo banks and 685 others employ D. B. C. pupils as cashiers, tellers, bookkeepers or stenographers. No other school offers such endorsement.

Our $80 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $85 course in Commerce and Banking (endorsed by Bankers' Association), supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the larger concerns. The shorthand course (under two expert reporters), trains court reporters and high grade stenographers. The stenographers for the U. S. District Court, N. D. Supreme Court, Third Judicial District, and the Cass Co. Court are D. B. C. graduates. Do other schools offer this PROOF of superior training?

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building (380,000 cubic feet of space), is seated with roll top desks, has 200 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. Our pupils deal with each other and with elegantly equipped offices, using aluminum money. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils like them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C." Next term begins soon. For booklet, write

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making The Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

Weddings

One of the prettiest weddings of the season took place on Tuesday when Miss Tyra Wallin became the bride of Mr. Albert Larson. Rev. Drols of Viking performed the ceremony. At 12 o'clock the party took their places beneath the wedding bell, to the music of the wedding march played by Mrs. Leonard Holmes.

The bride wore a beautiful dress of white marquisette over white silk with veil and carried a bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley. The two bridesmaids were Misses Anna Fellman and Elsie Erickson. They wore white silk and carried pink and white carnations. Mr. Roy Wallin and Mr. Gust Larson were best men.

After the ceremony a beautiful wedding song was given by Misses Gustafson and Fellman and Rev. Drols; also a poem composed and given by Mr. Blixt. After an elegant four course dinner Rev. and Mrs. Larson sang some beautiful songs. The afternoon was spent in conversation. Many lovely presents were received. The house was decorated with pink and white festooning.

GUNSTAD-ANDERSON—At the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Gunstad occurred the wedding of their son John to Miss Anna Anderson, daughter of Erick Anderson, on Saturday, Nov. 16, at 3 p. m., Rev. P. S. Palmer officiating.

The bride was attended by Miss Winifred Gunstad and Oscar Gunstad acted as best man. After the ceremony a dainty luncheon was served, only the immediate relatives being present.

The happy couple will make their home at the residence of the groom on a farm five miles north of town.

Wednesday afternoon a 5 o'clock lunch was served at the R. Wallin home to a few of the friends of the bride, Mrs. Albert Larson.

The sale at C. W. Lyman's place yesterday was well attended, and everything was sold and brought good prices.

The Black River congregation of the Swedish Lutheran church gave Rev. and Mrs. Sand a surprise party Thursday as a slight token of appreciation. The evening was passed in social chat and music. A lunch was served. Mr. Sand was presented with quite a large sum of money.

O. F. Post received word this morning of the death of John J. Soll at Clarkfield, Minn., Nov. 15, of paralysis. He had been a patient sufferer for some years. He will be remembered as a former resident here and at one time editor of The Spectator. We hope to give a fitting obituary next week.

BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

"Well, I've Got a Rug Up in My Room I'd Like to Show You."

SYNOPSIS.

George Percival Algernon Jones, vice-president of the Metropolitan Oriental Rug company of New York, thirsting for romance, is in Cairo on a business trip. Horace Ryanne arrives at the hotel in Cairo with a carefully guarded bundle.

CHAPTER III.—(Continued.)

George's romance gathered itself for a flight. Perhaps it was love thwarted and the gentleman with the mustache and imperial, in spite of his amiability, might be the ogre. Perhaps it was love and duty. Perhaps her lover had gone down to sea. Perhaps (for lovers are known to do such things) he had run away with the other girl. If that was the case, George did not think highly of that fugitive gentleman's taste. Perhaps and perhaps again; but George might have gone on perhapsing till the crack of doom, with never a solitary glimmer of the true state of the girl's mind. Whenever he saw an unknown man or woman who attracted his attention, he never could resist the impulse to invent a romance that might apply.

Immediately after dessert the two rose, and George, finding that nothing more important than a pineapple ice detained him, got up and followed. Mr. Ryanne almost trod on his heels as they went through the doorway into the cozy lounging-room. George dropped into a vacant divan and waited for his cafe a la Turque. Mr. Ryanne walked over to the head-porter's bureau and asked if that gentleman would be so kind as to point out Mr. George P. A. Jones, if he were anywhere in sight. He thoughtfully, not to say regretfully, laid down a small coin.

"Mr. Jones?" The porter knew Mr. Jones very well. He was generous, and treated the servants as though they were really human beings. Mr. Ryanne, either by his inquiry or as the result of his bribe, went up seven degrees in the porter's estimation. "Mr. Jones is over there, on the divan by the door."

"Thanks."

Mr. Ryanne did not then seek the young man. He studied the quarry from a diplomatic distance. No; there was nothing to indicate that George Percival Algernon Jones was in any way handicapped by his Arthuresque middle names.

"Solid, as Gioconda in her infinite wisdom hath said; but romantic, terribly romantic, yet, like the timid bather who puts a foot into the water, finds it cold, and withdraws it. It will all depend upon whether he is a real collector or merely a buyer of rugs. Forward, then, Horace; a sovereign has already dashed headlong down the far horizon." The curse of speaking his thoughts aloud did not lie heavily upon him tonight, for these cogitations were made in silence, unmarked by any facial expression. He proceeded across the room and sat down beside George. "I beg your pardon," he began, "but are you not Mr. Jones?"

Mildly astonished, George signified that he was.

"George P. A. Jones?"

George nodded again, but with some heat in his cheeks. "Yes. What is it?" The girl had just finished her coffee and was going away. Hang this fellow! What did he want at this moment?

If Ryanne saw that he was too much, as the French say, he also perceived the cause. The desire to shake George till his teeth rattled was instantly overcome. She hadn't seen him, and for this he was grateful. "You are interested in rugs? I mean old ones, rare ones, rugs that are bought once and seldom if ever sold again."

"Why, yes. That's my business." George had no silly ideas about trade. He had never posed as a gentleman's son in the sense that it meant idleness.

Ryanne presented his card.

"How do you pronounce it?" asked George naively.

"As they do in Cork."

"I never saw it spelled that way before."

"Nothing surprising in that," replied Ryanne. "No one else has, either."

George laughed and waited for the explanation.

"You see, Ryan is as good a name as they make them; but it classes with prize-fighters, politicians and bar chemists. The two extra letters put the finishing touch to the name. A jewel is all right, but what tells is the way you hang it round your neck. To me, those additional letters represent the jewel Ryan in the hands of a Lalique."

"You talk like an American."

"I am; three generations. What's the matter?" with sudden concern.

George was frowning. "Haven't I met you somewhere before?"

"Not to my recollection." A speculative frown now marred Ryanne's forehead. It did not illustrate a search in his memory for such a casualty as the meeting of George. He never forgot a face and certainly did not remember George's. Rather, the frown had its source in the mild dread that Percival Algernon had seen him somewhere during one of those indispositions of the morning after. "No, I think you have made a mistake."

"Likely enough. It just struck me that you looked something like a chap named Wadsworth, who was half-back on the varsity, when I entered my freshman year."

"A university man? Lord, no! I was turned loose at ten; been hustling ever since." Ryanne spoke easily, not a tremor in his voice, although he had received a slight mental jolt. "No; no college record here. But I want to chat with you about rugs. I've heard of you, indirectly."

"From the carpet fellows? We do a big business over here. What have you got?"

"Well, I've a rug up in my room I'd like to show you. I want your judgment for one thing. Will you do me the favor?"

Since the girl had disappeared and with her those imaginary appurtenances that had for a space transformed the lounging-room into a stage, George saw again with normal vision that the room was simply a common meeting-ground for well-dressed persons and ill-dressed persons, of the unimpeachable, the impeccable, the doubtful and the peccant; for in Cairo, as in ancient Egypt, there is every class and kind of humans, for whom the Decalogue was written, transcribed, and shattered by the turbulent Moses, an incident more or less forgotten these days. From the tail of his eye he gave swift scrutiny to his chance acquaintance, and he found nothing to warrant suspicion. It was not an unusual procedure for men to hunt him up in Cairo, in Constantinople, in Smyrna, or in any of the Oriental cities where his business itinerary led him. The house of Mortimer & Jones was widely known. This man Ryanne might have been anywhere between thirty and forty. He was tall, well set up, blond and smooth-skinned. True, he appeared to have been ill-fed recently. A little more flesh under the cheek-bones, a touch of color, and the Irishman would have been a handsome man. George could read a rug a league off, as they say, but he was a child in the matter of physiognomy, whereas Ryanne was a past-master in this regard; it was necessary both for his business and safety.

"Certainly, I'll take a look at it. But I tell you frankly," went on George, "that to interest me it's got to be a very old one. You see, it's a little fad of mine, outside the business end of it. I'm crazy over real rugs, and I know something about every rare one in existence, or known to exist. Is it a copy?"

"No. I'll tell you more about it when we get to my room."

"Come on, then." George was now quite willing to discuss rugs and carpets.

Having gained the room, Ryanne threw off his coat and relighted his cigar, which, in a saving mood, he had allowed to go out. He motioned George to be seated.

"Just a little yarn before I show you the rug. See these cuffs?"

"Yes."

"You will observe that I have had to reverse them. Note this collar? Same thing. Trousers-hems a bit frayed, coat shiny at the elbows." Ryanne exhibited his sole fortune. "Four sovereigns between me and a jail."

George became thoughtful. He was generous and kind-hearted among those he knew intimately or slightly, but he had the instinctive reserve of the seasoned traveler in cases like this. He waited.

"The truth is, I'm all but done for. And if I fail to strike a bargain here with you. . . . Well, I should hate to tell you the result. Our consul would have to furnish me passage home. Were you ever up against it to the extent of reversing your cuffs and turning your collars? You don't know what life is, then."

George gravely produced two good cigars and offered one to his host. There was an absence of sound, broken presently by the cheerful crackle of matches; two billowing clouds of smoke floated outward and upward. Ryanne sighed. Here was a cigar one could not purchase in all the length and breadth of the Orient, a Pedro Murias. In one of his doubtfully prosperous epochs he had smoked them daily. How long ago had that been?

"Yonder is a rug, a prayer-rug, as holy to the Moslem as the idol's eye is to the Hindu, as the Bible is to the Christian. For hundreds of years it never saw the outside of the Sultan's palace. One day the late, the recently late, Abdul the Unspeakable Turk, gave it to the Pasha of Bagdad. Whenever this rug makes its appearance in Holy Mecca, it is worshiped, and none but a Sultan or a Sultan's favorite may kneel upon it. Bagdad, the hundred mosques, the old capital of Suleiman the Great, the dreary Tigris and the sluggish Euphrates, a muezzin from the turret calls to prayer, and all that; eh?"

George leaned forward from his chair, a gentle terror in his heart. "The Yhiordes? By Jove! is that the Yhiordes?"

Admiration kindled in Ryanne's eyes. To have hit the bull's-eye with so free and quick an aim was ample proof that Percival Algernon had not boasted when be said that he knew something about rugs.

"You've guessed it."

"How did you come by it?" George demanded excitedly.

"Why do you ask that?"

"Man, ten-thousand pounds could not purchase that rug, that bit of carpet. Collectors from every port have been after it in vain. And you mean to tell me that it lies there, wrapped in butcher's paper?"

"Right-O!"

Ryanne solemnly detached a cuff and rolled up his sleeve. The bare muscular arm was scarred by two long, ugly knife-wounds, scarcely healed. Next he drew up a trousers-leg, disclosing a battered shin. "And there's another on my shoulder-blade, the closest call I ever had. A man who takes his life in his hands, as I have done, merits some reward. Mr. Jones, I'll be frank with you. I am a kind of derelict. Since I was a boy, I have hated the humdrum of offices, of shops. I wanted to be my own man, to go and come as I pleased. To do this and live meant precarious exploits. This rug represents one of them. I am telling you the family secret; I am showing you the skeleton in the closet, confidentially. I stole that rug; and when I say that the seven labors of our old friend Hercules were simple diversions compared, you'll recognize the difficulties I had to overcome. You know something of the Oriental mind. I handled the job alone. I may not be out of the jungle yet."

George listened entranced. He could readily construct the scenes through which this adventurer had gone; the watchful nights, the untiring patience, the thirst, the hunger, the heat. And yet, he could hardly believe. He was a trifle skeptical. Many a rogue had made the mistake of playing George's age against his experience. He had made some serious blunders in the early stages of the business, however; and everybody, to gain something in the end, must lose something at the start.

"If that rug is the one I have in mind, you certainly have stolen it. And if it's a copy, I'll tell you quickly enough."

"That's fair. And that's why," Ryanne declared, "I wanted you to look at it. To me, considering what I have gone through to get it, to me it is the genuine carpet. To your expert eye it may be only a fine copy. I know this much, that rare rugs and paintings have many copies, and that some one is being hooked, sold, bamboozled, sandbagged, every day in the week. If this is the real article, I want you to take it off my hands," the adventurer finished pleasantly.

"There will be a hue and cry."

"No doubt of it."

"And the devil's own job to get it out of Egypt." These were set phrases of the expert, preliminaries to bargaining. "One might as well carry round a stolen elephant."

"But a man who is as familiar with the game as you are would have little difficulty. Your integrity is an established fact, on both sides of the water. You could take it to New York as a copy, and no appraiser would know the difference. It's worth the attempt. I'd take it to New York myself, but you see, I am flat broke. Come; what do you or I care about a son-of-a-gun of a Turk?" drolly.

"What do you want for it, supposing it's genuine?" George's throat was dry and his voice harsh. His conscience roused herself, feebly, for it had been a long time since occasion had necessitated her presence.

Ryanne narrowed his eyes, carefully balancing the possibilities. "Say, one thousand pounds. It is like giving it away. But when the devil drives, you know. It is beyond any set price; it is worth what any collector is willing to pay for it. I believe I know the kind of man you are, Mr. Jones, and that is why, when I learned you were in Cairo, I came directly to you. You would never sell this rug. No. You would become like a miser over his gold. You would keep it with your emeralds (I have heard about them, too); draw the curtains, lock the doors, whenever you looked at it. Eh? You would love it for its own sake, and not because it is worth so many thousand pounds. You are sailing in a few days; that will help. The Pasha is in Constantinople, and it will be three or four weeks before he hears of the theft, or the cost," with a certain grimness.

"You haven't killed any one?" whispered George.

"I don't know; perhaps. Christianity against paganism; the Occidental conscience permits it." Ryanne made a gesture to indicate that he would submit to whatever moral arraignment Mr. Jones deemed advisable to make.

But George made none. He rose hastily, sought his knife and, without so much as by your leave, slashed the twine, flung aside the paper, and threw the rug across the counterpane. It was the Yhiordes. There was not the slightest doubt in his mind. He had heard it described, he had seen a photograph of it, he knew its history and, most vital of all, he owned a good copy of it.

Against temptation that was robust and energetic and alluring (like the man who insists upon your having a drink when you want it and ought not to have it), what chance had conscience, grown innocuous in the long period of the young man's good behavior? Collectors are always honest before and after that moment arrives when they want something desperately; and George was no more saintly than his kind. And how deep Ryanne and his confederates had delved into human nature, how well they could read and judge it, was made manifest in this moment of George's moral relapse.

Bagdad, the jinns, Sinbad, the Thousand and One Nights, Alibaba and the "Good night." George passed down the corridor to the adjoining room.

And now, bang! goes Pandora's box.

CHAPTER IV.

An Old Acquaintance.

That faculty which decides on the lawlessness of our actions; so the noted etymologist described conscience. It fell to another distinguished intellect to add that conscience makes cowards of us all. Ay. She may be overcome at times, sidetracked for any special desire that demands a clear way; but she's after us, fast enough, with that battered red lantern of hers, which, brought down from all tongues crisply into our own, reads—"Don't do it!" She herself is not wholly without cunning. She rarely stands boldly upon the track to flag us as we come. She realizes that she might be permanently ditched. No; it is far safer to run after us and catch Forty Thieves; George was transported mentally to that magic city, standing between the Tigris and the Euphrates, in all its white glory of a thousand years gone. Ryanne, the room and its furnishings, all had vanished, all save the exquisite fabric patterned out of wool and cotton and knotted with that mingling love and skill and patience the world knows no more. He let his hand stray over it. How many knees had pressed its thick yet pliant substance? How many strange scenes had it mutely witnessed, scenes of beauty, of terror? It shone under the light like the hide of a healthy hound.

The nerves of a smoker are generally made apparent by the rapidity of his exhalations. These two, in the several minutes, had filled the room with a thick, blue haze; and through this the elder man eyed the younger. The sign of the wolf gleamed in his eyes, but without animosity, modified as it was by the half-friendly, half-cynical smile.

"I'll risk it," said George finally, having stepped off the magical carpet, as it were. "I can't give you a thousand pounds tonight. I can give you three hundred, and the balance tomorrow, between ten and eleven, at Cook's."

"That will be agreeable to me."

George passed over all the available cash he had, rolled up the treasure and tucked it under his arm. That somewhere in the world was a true believer, wailing and beating his breast and calling down from Allah curses upon the giaour, the dog of an infidel, who had done this thing, disturbed George not in the least.

"I say," as he opened the door, "you must tell me all about the adventure. It must have been a thriller."

"It was," replied Ryanne. "The story will keep. Later, if you care to hear it."

"Of course," added George, moved by a discretionary thought, "this transaction is just between you and me."

"You may lay odds on that," heartily. "Well, good night. See you at Cook's in the morning."

us. A digression, perhaps, but more pertinently an application.

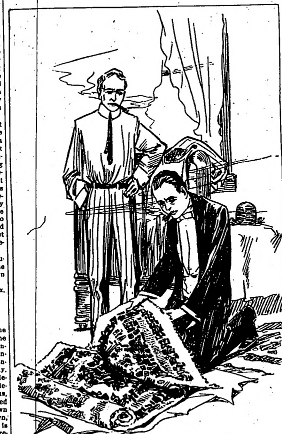
Temptation then no longer at his shoulder, George began to have qualms, little chaps, who started buzzing into his moral ears with all that maddening, interminable drone which makes one marvel however do schoolteachers survive their first terms. Among these qualms there was none that pleaded for the desolate Turk or his minions whose carelessness had made the theft possible. For all George cared, the Moslem might grind his forehead in the soulless sand and make the air palpitate with his plaints to Allah. No. The disturbance was due to the fact that never before had he been wittingly the purchaser of stolen goods. He never tried to gloze over the subtle distinction between knowing and suspecting; and if he had been variously suspicious in regard to certain past bargains, conscience had found no sizeable wedge for her demurrers. The Yhiordes was confessedly stolen.

He paused, with his hand upon the door-knob of his room. If he didn't keep the rug, it would fall into the hands of a collector less scrupulous. To return it to the Pasha at Bagdad would be pure folly, and thankless. It was one of the most beautiful weavings in existence. It was as priceless in its way as any Raphael in the Vatican. And he desired its possession intensely. Why not? Insidious phrase! Was it not better that the world should see and learn what a wonderful craft the making of a rare rug had been, than to allow it to return to the sordid chamber of a harem, to inevitable ruin? As Ryanne said, what the deuce was a fanatical Turk or Arab to him?

Against these specious arguments in favor of becoming the adventurer's abettor and accomplice, there was first the possible stain of blood. The man agreed that he had come away from Bagdad in doubt. George did not like the thought of blood. Still, he had collected a hundred emeralds, not one of which was without its red record. Again, if he carried the rug home with his other purchases, he could pull it through the customs only by lying, which was as distasteful to his mind as being a receiver of stolen goods.

He had already paid a goodly sum against the purchase; and it was not likely that a man who was down to reversing his collars and cuffs would take back the rug and refund the money. The Yhiordes was his, happen what might. So conscience snuffed out her red lantern and retired.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)



It Was the Yhiordes.

Poor as a Church Mouse

Since Confetti Came Into Use, the Saying Has More Meaning Than at Former Times.

The sexton of a fashionable New York church was sweeping into a large mound the bright purple, red and yellow discs of confetti which littered the church entrance and steps.

"This month," he said, "I have had already 35 weddings in my church. And at every one of these weddings paper confetti was thrown at the bride instead of rice.

"The confetti fashion is very welcome to us sextons. When rice was used our churches were overrun with mice. The saying, 'As poor as a church mouse,' was then meaningless. Why, in my church, where weddings are so popular, several hundreds of mice—fat chaps they were, too—found an ample food supply in the rice that was sprinkled over the brides.

"Now that rice has been abandoned for paper confetti, these mice have all disappeared. They were starved out. They couldn't live on paper."

Bending with difficulty to collect a few obstinate pieces of the bright paper confetti that stuck to the floor, the old sexton added:

"Of course, these bits of paper are much more awkward for me to sweep up than rice. But, even so, I hope the confetti fashion has come to stay."

Public Schools.

In antiquity the masses of the people grew up in ignorance of things literary. Public education—the education that exists for the masses of the people—began, practically, with John Calvin's rule in Geneva, from which time popular education had steadily gained ground. The free school system had its beginning in Great Britain, about the year 1780, with Robert Raikes and his Sunday school movement. It was not until 1860, however, that the free public schools began to get itself firmly rooted in the British Isles. In this country from the start the idea of universal education was championed by Jefferson and other leaders among us, and the idea has never ceased to be fundamental with us, as absolutely necessary to the prevention of the liberty on which the government is founded.

Odd Case of Friendship.

At the present time a most unusual case of affection between a domiciled and a comparatively wild animal is to be witnessed at the little English hamlet of Spoonley, near Market Drayton. On the farm of Mr. William Woodburn for a week or two past, a small rough, somewhat vicious terrier from the farmstead has been noticed gambolling in the fields with a large well-developed hare. Such an attachment is most uncommon.

Happens Sometimes.

"Get off and let's go to the ball game."

"I got off the other day. Can't repeat so soon."

"Then we'll go to the theater tonight."

"Can't do that either. The office plays a double-header and we work tonight."

Ingenious Alarm Clock.

A French jeweler has brought out an electric alarm clock that will ring a bell or perform other services one or more times a day at a set hour every day or only on designated days.

Too patiently do many women endure backache, languor, dizziness and urinary ills, thinking them part of woman's lot. Often it is only weak kidneys and Doan's Kidney Pills would cure the case.

Farms for Children.

Perhaps the smallest farms in the world, each four by eight feet, have been devised by Mrs. Henry Parsons for the International Children's School Farm league, and demonstrated in New York. Each child becomes owner of his diminutive farm, in which he works, grows and harvests seven different kinds of vegetables, and these are borne by him in triumph to his family. About each farm is an 18-inch path, which he keeps in order; under his instructor it becomes a tiny object lesson in good roads.

SCOFFERS
Often Make the Staunchest Converts.

The man who scoffs at an idea or doctrine which he does not fully understand has at least the courage to show where he stands.

The gospel of Health has many converts who formerly laughed at the idea that coffee and tea, for example, ever hurt anyone. Upon looking into the matter seriously, often at the suggestion of a friend, such persons have found that Postum and a friend's advice have been their salvation.

"My sister was employed in an eastern city where she had to do calculating," writes an Okla. girl. "She suffered with headache until she was almost unfitted for duty.

"Her landlady persuaded her to quit coffee and use Postum and in a few days she was entirely free from headache." (Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) "She told her employer about it, and on trying it, he had the same experience.

"My father and I have both suffered much from nervous headache since I can remember, but we scoffed at the idea advanced by my sister, that coffee was the cause of our trouble.

"However, we finally quit coffee and began using Postum. Father has had but one headache now in four years, due to a severe cold, and I have lost my headaches and sour stomach, which I am now convinced came from coffee.

"A cup of good, hot Postum is satisfying to me when I do not care to eat a meal. Circumstances caused me to locate in a new country and I feared I would not be able to get my favorite drink, Postum, but I was relieved to find that a full supply is kept here with a heavy demand for it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

MADE A CLEAN JOB OF IT

First Time Old Gentleman Had Eaten a Crab, and He Left Nothing on the Dish.

A jolly old boy from the Midlands entered into one of the hotels at the seaside, and, seeing on the slab on the right a crab dressed on the shell with legs, claws and parsley ranged round, said to the landlord:

"What d'ye call that?"

"Crab," was the answer.

"Looks good. I'll have 'un; and gie us a pint o' ale."

Bread and butter was added and the diner left to his dinner. In about an hour the genial landlord entered the dining room to see if his guest was getting on all right. He found him chawing up the last claw, the chawer red in the face, but beaming.

"Like the crab, sir?"

"Yes; he was capital. I never tasted one afore. But I think you baked 'un a little too long; the crust was hard. Let's have another pint."

He had eaten the lot—shell, claws all complete.—London Tit-Bits.

JUDGE CURED, HEART TROUBLE.

I took about 6 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills for Heart Trouble from which I had suffered for 5 years. I had dizzy spells, my eyes puffed, my breath was short and I had chills and backache. I took the pills about a year ago and have had no return of the palpitations. Am now 63 years old, able to do lots of manual labor, am well and hearty and weigh about 209 pounds. I feel very grateful that I found Dodds Kidney Pills and you may publish this letter if you wish. I am serving my third term as Probate Judge of Gray Co. Yours truly,

WATER TROUGH QUITE NOVEL

Heavy Metal Base Holds Pipe Which Is Attached to the Support So That It Can Revolve.

Something new and odd in the way of water troughs has been designed by a California man. Its novelty lies in the fact that it is self-cleaning. A heavy metal base supports a pipe, which is journaled on the support so that it can revolve thereon. In that section of the pipe that is normally underneath are a series of perforations. Rigidly attached to the pipe and swinging from it like a cradle is the trough. A hose leads from the pipe to a hydrant, and when the water is turned on from the hydrant the trough is quickly filled. If the trough is to be cleaned it can be inverted, and as the holes in the pipe follow it around, a stream of water is squirted up up against it and flushes it. This receptacle can also be used as a feed trough and the hose attachment used only to clean it.

MANAGING THE ANGORA GOAT

Animals Have Natural Inclination to Browse on Coarse Herbage, but Must Have Other Feed.

(By B. E. LARA.)

Goats, like other animals, must be fed or they will die. Some people do not seem to recognize this fact, but it is true. Goats have a natural inclination to browse on shrubs, weeds or any other coarse-leaved herbage, but they must have nutritious feed in addition to thrive.

If Angora goats are fed and treated as one would treat sheep they will get along very well. In the winter time they need clean clover hay and some grain, and clean, fresh water at all times. The goat is almost as finicky as the sheep and requires water untainted by any other animal, sweet grain and hay, as they will not touch these feeds if they are musty.

Too much has been said about the ability of goats as weed destroyers. It is true they will clean up a pasture of coarse weeds, and so will sheep; we have never been able to discover much difference and, taking everything into consideration, we believe that the farmer who raises sheep instead of goats will get better satisfaction from his flock.

RACK FOR FEEDING FODDER

If Sides and Bottom Are Made Tight Grain May Be Fed as Well as Roughage—May Be Moved.

A rack for feeding fodder may be built on two runners 2x8, ten feet long. Five pieces of 2x4 stuff are bolted to these runners. The sides are made of 2x4's, five feet long, to which may be nailed such lumber as may be at hand, leaving a space of sixteen inches about eighteen inches from the bottom of the rack. If the sides and bottom of this rack are made tight grain can be fed in them as well as fodder, says the Iowa Homestead. They will also hold quite a lot of hay and so may be used as a hay rack. This rack may be moved from one location to another as needed.

Feed Rack.

Breaking Colt to Lead.

In breaking a colt to lead do not separate from the dam, but place a small halter on the colt and then have some one lead the mare around. The colt will naturally follow. By gentle pressure or tension on the halter it is surprising how quickly the little fellow will learn to follow you instead of his mother. Care must be taken not to throw, frighten or injure him if he becomes excited, as it would have the bad effect of making him nervous when being handled.

Weight of the Team.

The small mule and horse are enemies to good farming. Deep plowing cannot be done with the light team, and deep stirring of the soil is one of the fundamentals. Get weight in your teams so you can plow right.

Disease Preventive.

The man who keeps everything neat and clean about his hog yards is not very apt to have any trouble from cholera or any other disease, provided, of course, that he feeds good clean feed.

SECURING PROFIT IN SHEEP

If Pure-Bred and Well Cared for They Pay Handsomely—Need Shelter in Severe Weather.

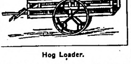
My sheep are pure American Merinos, all registered. Two of this kind I can keep in summer or winter with the same care and feed with which one of most any other breed can be kept, says a writer in an exchange. My sheep barn is a closed building with a broad door so that the sheep can go in and out without crowding each other. The feeding racks in one room are on the outside; the other room has a double rack through the middle. I give my sheep a large run in the fall so they go into winter quarters in good condition and never leave them out in heavy rains through the season.

The breeding ewes are let out every morning in winter to eat their grain, which is oats, and to give them exercise. I feed them hay three times a day. Some only feed twice. I only give them a little at noon time, also give their pens a litter of oat straw two or three times a week. I try to have my sheep shorn before they drop their lambs so the little fellows have no trouble to find their first meal. The ewe that is in good condition has a good supply of milk and almost always owns her lamb. I never keep salt by them, but feed it to them once a week. I have water by them all the time. I never allow the ram to run with the ewes. The rams that are to be used are fed three-quarters oats and one-quarter wheat mixed. The young lambs in the fall and winter are fed twice daily a grain ration of oats and sometimes wheat bran half mixed.

DEVICE FOR LOADING SWINE

Detailed Instructions and Illustration Given for Construction of Implement Handy on Farm.

The device described and shown herewith may be found very handy on any farm. Take a mower truck, hammer and cold chisel and knock off the prongs and so make a smooth wheel. Then drive out the pins that go through the shaft. Take the sickle bars from an old binder for sills. Lay the guard holes down and stick a bolt in the holes where the pins were and through the holes where the guards were. Then you have a hole every two inches and by taking off the burrs you can change to any height from a high wagon to a bob sled. Put a good piece of oak on the upper end 2x8, bore two holes in the center, then take an old tongue and bore two holes through it, stick in the bolt and you have a cart. Have an end gate for each end so that the sow, pigs or calves can be removed from one pen to another with ease.



Hog Loader.

Raising Race Winners.

Before deciding to patronize any particular stallion, though his blood lines may be pleasing, the small breeder who is desirous of raising race winners should learn whether the horse has sired race winning speed or not. He should also learn whether the ancestors of the stallion on both sides have been successful either as race winners themselves or as sires or producers of uniform race winning speed. The horse all of whose ancestors for several generations have been the most successful in this respect, other things being equal, is the most likely to transmit race winning speed.

Shoeing the Colt.

The first shoeing of a colt is the most important, not only in the fit of the shoes, but also in seeing that the colt is not badly scared by the forge the unusual handling and new sounds. Horses mean to shoe are generally the result of improper handling at early shoeings.

Stunted Pigs.

Be careful not to treat in any way or fed your pigs so as to stunt their growth, for a pig once stunted never can be fed so economically as before the stunted period of his life began and he will never be such a hog as he or she otherwise would have been.

Slobber in Horses.

Cabbage will sometimes cure slobber in horses, caused by eating white clover; but it is better to keep the clover away from the horses.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Inferior sows constantly pull down the average of the herd.

Muddy pens in winter are discouraging places to keep a hog.

Sheep will do better on rough land than will any other kind of stock save goats.

Good feeding is an integral part of success in breeding pure-bred swine.

A rigid system of selection of brood sows should be practiced by all swine breeders.

Kaffir fodder should never be fed exclusively to cattle because it will scour them.

The profits of a successful hog man rest largely upon his success in raising pigs.

Few branches of stock feeding offer better inducements than feeding range lambs.

Cattle feeding is not a hazardous business, provided it is done intelligently and conservatively.

Soft coal or coal cinders are relished by pigs and hogs because of the mineral matter they contain.

Hogs that have a natural shelter and a good dry ground under them will always do well in winter.

Lambs to be finished for market should go into winter feeding quarters before the weather becomes cold and unsettled.

HIDDEN CHURCHES OF BEROEA

Edifices Were Refuges for Macedonian Christians From Turkish Persecution.

Beroea.—By far the most interesting sight to the modern traveler in Macedonia, says the Christian Herald, is that of the "hidden churches" of Beroea. I have consulted many volumes of commentaries and descriptive writings, the scanty guide books of Macedonia and all other available sources of information and find no remotest allusion to this most interesting feature of Beroea.

Even the missionaries and Greek Christians of Salonica, 40 miles away, so far as I could learn, had never heard of them. There are no less than 72 of these hidden churches which were tucked away in all sorts of obscure and undreamed of corners, when, some hundreds of years ago, the Greeks were in deadly fear of Turkish persecution.

Typical Greek Street.

No outward sign gave a hint that a church was anywhere in the vicinity, but our guide led us through crooked, narrow streets with overhanging balconies whose upper stories almost touched each other; then would enter a courtyard where a family or perhaps a dozen families lived and where the housemothers were cooking the noonday meal or doing the weekly washing. Out of this courtyard another door would open into a still narrower yard, and there at the end perhaps we would see a door with a rude cross marked in charcoal or in chalk upon it.

One of the inhabitants of this inner courtyard would be found to have the key of the door and, opening it, would usher us into a tiny church, perhaps not more than ten feet square, but in it we would always see one or more icons or pictures of Christ and the saints, covered with tinsel or gold foil except for their hands and faces. There would also be a row of candle spikes on which to impale the tapers so freely used in Greek worship, an altar, and a holy of holies behind a painted curtain.

Some of these churches were much larger than such a one as I have described and on the further side there was often a way of egress, sometimes an underground passage, so that if the persecuting Turks should catch the worshippers at their devotions they might escape massacre by flight.

ARRESTED FOR DOG'S TRICKS

Railway Station Blocked by Impromptu Circus Performance at Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Because his trained dog performed tricks in Broad street station and caused a crowd to collect, Arthur Randall of 1918 Rittenhouse street, was arrested and arraigned before Magistrate Track, sitting in the Twentieth district police station. He was discharged after being reprimanded. Randall went into the station with his pet water spaniel on a leash. When his pet began to display the more than ordinary acquirements of the dog Special Policeman Horn demanded that the exhibition cease, and it was upon this ultimatum that the policeman and the owner of the dog took issue. A lively argument followed, which resulted in the arrest of Randall.

FISH WORMS LEGAL TENDER

Barber Gives Shave for Each Can o' Bait Brought to Shop by Illinois Farmer.

Mount Carmel, Ill.—Fish bait at present is one of the scarcest commodities to be found in this city and vicinity, and fishermen are most numerous.

As a result, many of the small boys are working overtime digging worms for a lively market.

Everett Deffindall, a barber, however, has outwitted them all in the matter of obtaining worms.

He made a contract with a farmer near the city, on whose place worms grow big and thick, to give him a shave for each can of worms he got.

The plan has worked handsomely, the farmer coming in to town regularly to get his shave, with a can of wigglers.

FINAL RESULT OF IMPURE BLOOD

The System Is Left Weak, Run Down and Helpless Against the Attacks of Disease.

If you need strength, if your blood is thin, your digestion disordered, it will pay you to investigate the merits of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, the remedy that has transformed so many weak, anaemic, dyspeptic, ambitionless people into strong, healthy, hungry men and women.

Mrs. Lena May Roberts, whose address is R. F. D. No. 3, Aberdeen, So. Dakota after several months of suffering finally found the right tonic in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She says:

"For months after the birth of my baby, I suffered terribly from a general breakdown in health. I was in bed for three months and after that was able to be up only part of the time. I was sick all over, being pale, weak and thin. My appetite was gone and my head ached most of the time. Oftentimes there seemed to be a rush of blood to my head and I would faint away. I was very nervous and was not strong enough to do any work.

"As the treatment I was taking did not help me, I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which a friend said had helped her. After taking a few boxes, I began to get well rapidly. I continued using them for a time and am now as well and strong as ever in my life."

The value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in general debility lies in their direct response to the needs of the blood. Their work is to make new blood. That they do this well is shown by the gradual disappearance of the symptoms and the return of color and health. They lay the foundation for permanent health in the future.

For the same reason these pills have cured anaemia, after-effects of the grip and fevers, rheumatism, indigestion, and nervousness, dizziness, neuralgia and St. Vitus' dance, and are recommended wherever a tonic for the blood and nerves is needed.

A valuable booklet, "Diseases of the Blood," containing fuller information about rheumatism and other diseases of the blood will be sent free upon request.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. Adv.

Calumet Ends "Bad Luck."

Remember when you were a youngster, what a trial baking day was? If Mother was lucky, everything went finely—but if she had "bad luck" her cakes and her pies and her bread were failures. Her success in baking seemed to depend almost altogether on "luck."

Nowadays there's no such thing as "baking luck." At least, not in the kitchens of the up-to-date cooks. Simply because Calumet Baking Powder has smashed that old time idea. It has made baking sure of success. It has made inexperienced cooks able to bake perfectly, and day after day it is saving hundreds of dollars' worth of time and materials by doing away with costly failures.

Calumet Baking Powder is the purest baking powder made—and guaranteed not only to BE pure, but to stay pure in the CAN and in the BAKING. Calumet has twice been officially judged the BEST baking powder made—receiving the highest awards at the World's Pure Food Expositions in Chicago (1907) and in Paris (1912). Adv.

Lot of Money Well Spent.

Arthur Blanchard, who spends much of his time traveling over the country for the government, was seated behind a bride and groom in a Pullman car one afternoon when the train went through a long tunnel. As it emerged into the light of day the bride was grabbing desperately at her hat and fighting three fast rounds with one or two hatpins which had become loosened.

In order to relieve the situation and inject some harmless conversation into the gap, Blanchard remarked:

"This tunnel cost $12,000,000."

"Well," said the bride, judicially, "it was worth it."—Popular Magazine.

ROYALTY WELCOMES THE AMERICAN SETTLER

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS, THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, WELCOMES AMERICANS TO CANADA.

It was a happy speech, that on that beautiful October day, the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, made at Macleod, Alberta. It was an opportune speech, heartful and resonant with good fellowship. And, as it was specially intended for American ears, the audience, comprised largely of so many American settlers in Canada, the time and place could not have been better chosen.

It was in reply to an address of welcome tendered to him at the pretty city of Macleod, with the foothills of the Rockies as a setting, and the great wheat fields between, and in fact all around the place as the foreground, that His Highness, true to the best interests of the country and to those of the Americans who choose to make Canada their home, said in part:

"I am well aware that among those whom I am now addressing, there are a very great proportion who were not born under the British flag. Most of these will have realized by now that residence under that flag implies no disabilities. All we ask is that the laws of Canada should be obeyed.

"With this provision every one is free to come and go, to marry, to live and to die as seems best to him, and as it pleases Providence.

"We bring no pressure to bear on anyone to adopt the Canadian nationality, for we do not value citizenship which is obtained under compulsion.

"Our American cousins are welcome from over the border. Thrice we welcome our Canadian and British brothers, who return to the Union Jack, after living under the Stars and Stripes.

"History is repeating itself. For many years hundreds of young Britishers have sought fortune in the western States. Time has brought about a change, and the tide has set in the other direction, bringing across the frontier numbers of our neighbors to whom we are glad to return hospitalities.

"One of the chief dispensers of such hospitality in proportion to its population has, as we have said, changed its character from an important cattle town to a thriving wheat producing area.

"What it has lost from the picturesque point of view, it has gained in the material side, and I wish, in conclusion, to express the hope that the prosperity which has evinced itself here for the past ten years, may continue unabated in the future."

There is no reason why at a hundred places on this educative, instructive and interesting trip of His Royal Highness he might not have expressed himself in the same terms, and on each occasion, addressed large gatherings of Americans who are now settled on the prairies of Western Canada.—Advertisement.

Stretching It Some.

Two men were boasting about their rich kin. Said one: "My father has a big farm in Connecticut. It is so big that when he goes to the barn on Monday morning to milk the cows he kisses us all goodby, and he doesn't get back till the following Saturday."

"Why does it take him so long?" the other asked.

"Because the barn is so far away from the house."

"Well, that may be a pretty big farm, but compared to my father's farm in Pennsylvania your father's farm ain't no bigger than a city lot!"

"Why, how big is your father's farm?"

"Well, it's so big that my father sends young married couples out to the barn to milk the cows, and the milk is brought back by their grandchildren."

Of Course.

NOTES FROM MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

A siro is half the herd.

Transplant trees in the fall.

Apples do well in cold storage.

Plow the garden in the fall, if possible.

Tiling increases the acreage without increase of taxes.

Alfalfa hay is a very good feed for the dairy cow, and corn silage is also good.

One great advantage in the poultry business is the quick returns on the investment.

Fine corn meal for the skim milk calf is a good substitute for the more expensive oil meal.

It is easy for one man, with a little help during the brooding season, to raise 4,000 chickens.

To double the amount of milk per acre and cut the cost of milk production in two—build a silo.

The production of green ducks is coming to be a large business, especially in the eastern states.

If from a well-nourished dam and a healthy strain of animals, the pigs rarely need attention at farrowing time.

Hogs should not as a rule be turned into more corn at one time than they can eat up clean in two or three weeks.

In pruning the orchard of diseased limbs and twigs, the pruning shears should be sterilized before and after each operation.

Hogs ought to have all the corn they can properly digest if they are to be pushed along and put quickly upon the market.

The care of the teats should always be observed by the milker, and when they get hard and rough should be anointed with vaseline.

Time spent in cleaning up an orchard in the fall of the year will be amply rewarded with better and cleaner fruit the next season.

When you see the sheep nibbling at their sides take a good look at them. There is something wrong. See if you can't find something wrong. See if you can't find some ticks.

Build silos, grow less acres of corn but utilise the whole crop in its best form, and grow alfalfa on the corn acreage saved for a cheap, palatable, home-grown balancer for corn.

Have a light poultry house, admitting plenty of fresh air without producing direct drafts of air. The germs of most diseases cannot live in fresh air or very strong light.

A yield of 12 tons of silage may easily be obtained from one acre of corn. Allowing 30 pounds of silage as a daily ration, one acre of corn will furnish four cows with silage for 200 days.

A bright, intelligent man, a good manager and a close observer will save more than his wages in the amount of work he will accomplish, and in maintaining the condition of his team.

The value of rape or any non-leguminous crop for green manure will depend very materially upon the mechanical condition of the soil and the rotation of crops which is practiced upon the land.

A house to accommodate a single sow does not need a great deal of ventilation, although there should be enough to keep the air in good condition, but where a dozen or more hogs are kept in the same house perfect ventilation is necessary.

Though it is generally conceded among poultrymen that the long continuous poultry house is well adapted to the housing of grown and laying stock, it is a fact that the young growing stock is better cared for in the separate small colony houses.

A little pig, just like a growing plant, needs sunshine. In both cases it seems to be a sort of tonic that makes the best development possible.

Catch the lame ewe and see if she isn't in the first stages of foot rot. Looks like it from here, though it may be that her hoof only needs trimming.

A good plan to give your hens plenty in the winter is to cover the hen house floor with leaves. Then scatter small grain and crushed corn among the leaves when you feed the fowls at noon. The chickens will get the grain and find wholesome exercise in doing it.

To fatten poultry for market, remove from the yards and place, without overcrowding, in a coop which should be provided with a canvas cover to draw down and keep the inmates in darkness. Do not feed for about six hours after placing in the coop, and then feed all they will eat. Feed three times a day, and keep fresh water and a basin of grit always before them.

Keep the hoe sharpened.

A check rein is a cruelty.

Soy beans are rich in protein.

Spread the farm manure in winter.

Tall weeds should be mowed and burned.

Selling the fertility of the soil is a poor way to get rich.

It is important that some grain be fed pigs intended for the market.

Storm windows should take the place of wire screens on the house.

After your crop is made the problem is how to sell it to the best advantage.

The department of agriculture says that rats do an annual damage of $100,000,000.

Feeding chicks when too young and too much at a time are fruitful sources of bowel trouble.

While you are at it, why not get on the track of some better stock than you have ever kept?

The young trees should be banked with earth, which will keep water from settling about them.

Gardens should be cleared from all remains of the season's crops and prepared for the next year.

The heifer bred too early always remains stunted in growth and her milk flow is shortened for all time.

If you'll save a little seed corn earlier in the season, you'll save a little money later in the season.

The leaves of trees that can be gathered in any quantity during winter and spring are very valuable.

The best compost heap is the manure of horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, and fowls. All such should be saved.

The cow-testing movement, being an organized effort for improvement, is conducive to better community spirit.

For the amount of money invested in the poultry business, it pays a larger profit than any other farm specialty.

Silage is very nearly as cheap as pasture and in composition is practically the same, pound for pound, as timothy pasture.

Plow the garden this fall and see how it goes to be able to work the soil which, in the early spring, had this fall plowing.

Do not think because a sheep has a heavy coat of wool he will be able to endure cold rains and sleep without a warm shelter.

The yards and sleeping quarters must be kept dry and clean, as impure air and dampness are two things that a sheep cannot endure.

A part of the poultry on the farm is that covey of quail you have observed in the back fields somewhere, and a little attention to those small fowls is worth while.

It is not bad practice to treat the wheat seed to a liquid spraying of one pound of formaldehyde in forty gallons of water. It will prevent the smut damage.

The most important business of the dairyman is to increase the amount of manurial substances and apply them where they are most needful by the growing crops.

There is one big advantage in sowing the winter wheat late and that is you stand a good chance to escape the Hessian fly, which does so much damage to the wheat fields.

In feeding the cows do not give them more than they can use readily. Any feed that is left in the mangers after the cows are through will naturally represent a certain amount of waste.

Brood sows should have a quiet, warm, dry place where their litters may spend the first weeks of their lives without being unnecessarily disturbed by other animals or inquisitive people.

Unleached wood ashes contain from five to seven per cent. of potash and are an excellent fertilizer. As is well known, the ashes from hard wood are much richer in potash than those from soft wood.

The droppings from the cattle will benefit the pasture more if they are spread or broken up with a spike tooth harrow with the teeth set well aslant. This prevents the grass from being killed out and weeds coming in where the droppings have laid.

A profitable crop cannot be grown on land deficient in humus, which is the same thing as rotted sod or rotted manure, with fertiliser alone.

Pigs that are allowed to run with the sows until she weans them herself are always more thrifty than those that are weaned early. Of course, this is pretty hard on the sow but if she is full fed on milk-producing feed she will not suffer greatly.

A good way to cure a dog of the habit of rushing out at travelers as they pass is to put on an old overcoat or otherwise disguise, fill the garden sprayer with diluted ammonia and give him a dose as he tears out into the road. One dose is generally sufficient.

If the lambs are to be fattened for market start them on a little grain just as soon as they will learn to eat it and feed grain continuously with good pasture until they go to the block. Prime fat ribs cannot be produced by alternate grass and grain. They must be pushed to lay on fat from start to finish.

ONE GIRL'S PLUCK

She Out-Generaled a Robber and Saved Her Father's Position.

By H. M. EGBERT.

As the freight train disappeared round the bend into the distance Menzies crouched under the lee of the bank and looked cautiously around him. His clothes were ragged, his shoes displayed a liberal space of unclad ankle; also, he was hungry. "Hard Luck" Menzies, he was called among his fellow yeggs. Hobo by trade, thief as a side line, his sobriquet had hitherto always justified itself. Where others of his kind received a generous meal he would fall foul of a bulldog; and he hardly ever stole a ride but he was spotted and thrown into the cinder-strewn roadbed.

This time, however, fate seemed to have been kind to him. He had laid his plans well. He had ridden from Uniondale upon a freight and leaped off at the precalculated place without detection. He knew that Old Man Keyes, the station agent, was hurrying west upon the night train that ran by Howland Junction, that his daughter took charge during his rare absences, and that there must be two thousand dollars, all told, in the tiny wayside station which stood alone in the center of a vast plain of swamp-lots.

The night was moonless and this favored him; the chances of capture were almost infinitesimal. Once the money was his he would strike for Uniondale along the pike which paralleled the railroad, and, the five miles completed, what easier than to conceal himself and his hoard among the floating mining population of that little Pennsylvania town?

After a while he rose cautiously from behind the shelter of the bank and, crouching low toward the damp ground, approached the shanty. A single electric light burned within. Against this he could see the profile of a woman seated at a typewriter; he heard as he drew nearer the tap, tap of the keys. At her left hand was a telegraph board; at her right a telephone. His first object, then, must be to withdraw her attention from those two convenient instruments, before he could venture to lay hands upon the comfortable piles of greenbacks which a sure instinct told him lay neatly folded within the drawer of her desk.

All at once his eyes fell upon something that set his heart thumping exultantly. It was a revolver, doubtless the girl's father's, which he had left with her for protection in case anybody should choose that night of all others on which to make his attempt. But she had placed it at her back, on a small table—and just within reach of his hand if he could gain the window sill. With the dexterity born of long practice Menzies hoisted himself upon the sill, and, reaching in carefully, grasped the weapon by the muzzle and drew it toward him.

At that moment the girl suddenly rose, and Menzies, still holding the weapon, crouched back behind the jutting portion of the window frame; in this position he was invisible except in case she should come to the window. The girl took down the receiver. Menzies prepared for flight at her first words. Then, as he remembered that she had made no movement toward the revolver, his courage revived.

"Hello!" she called. "Crosstown! Is that you, Harry? Yes, this is me. Father had to meet the superintendent at Howland Junction this evening and I'm in charge. No; why should I be afraid? He left me his revolver." Menzies heard her laugh softly. Then, "You're at the telephone tonight?" she continued. "Of course I will if I need anybody, but who's going to break in this evening of all nights in the year?"

A few more words and she hung up the receiver. Turning to resume her seat, the girl came face to face with Menzies, now in the room and covering her with the revolver.

"Sorry to scare you, miss," he volunteered, "but I'm not going to harm you. I want that money in that there drawer—likewise the registered mail."

He grinned with the satisfaction of work well done, for the girl, terrified, first uttered a stifled cry and then sank into her chair, half fainting, staring up at him with a look of abject terror. Menzies looked; the key was actually in the drawer.

"Now if you'll sit perfectly still, miss," said Menzies, "you won't be hurt any. I'll just shift you away from that there telegraph."

He carried her in the chair into the center of the office and then set about his task. Inside the drawer, neatly stacked into separate compartments, were various piles of bills—five fifties, a heap of twenties, and several tens and fives. There must have been more nearly a thousand than five hundred dollars, besides a heap of silver, which Menzies prudenly left behind. He would need to travel lightly that evening.

Afterward with his knife he ripped up the registered mail bag. Here disappointment met him; he had not calculated that it was the day before pay day, and that the mail would be light. He thrust a bundle of the more promising looking letters into his pockets. Meanwhile, evidenly completely cowed and frightened, the girl lay back in the chair, watching him with wide-open, horrified eyes. Menzies anticipated no trouble from her. He rose; he was going to put the telegraph and telephone out of commission. The former enterprise he had already accomplished with a small fire ax which lay conveniently near to hand; but as he approached the latter instrument, considering where to begin, the girl spoke for the first time:

"Won't you do something for me first?" she asked piteously.

"Sure, miss," answered Menzies, grinning. "Except put back them bills".

"No, no, it isn't that," she answered hastily. "It's my father. He'll lose his position for this and he's too old to get employment anywhere else."

Menzies leered at her amiably. "Sorry to get him fired from his job," he said. "Whatcher want me to do? Get him another?"

"No, but—"

"Well, what kin I do?" Menzies growled. "Divvy up with him?"

"No. I want you to leave a message saying that you took the money. I'll—I'll write it for you on my typewriter," she added with trembling lips, while her heart began beating furiously. "It won't take a moment. And it's his position."

Menzies was tickled by the idea. As a tramp he had acquired the habit of leaving impudent messages on the walls of hostile farm buildings; this struck him as humorous. Besides, nobody knew his scrawl. "Sure, miss," he answered. "Only, you see, my edication was rather neglected after I left college, and I ain't a first-class speller."

"I only want you to put your name to it," answered the girl. "May I go to the typewriter?"

As Menzies watched her suspiciously, she rose and drew her chair to the front of the machine, in which she inserted a sheet of telegraph paper. The telephone, on which Menzies fixed his eye, ready in case of treachery, stood on a movable arm, placed there for the person at the desk, so that it could be swung back, this obviating the necessity of rising and going to the box on the wall. From the top of the desk projected a pile of ledgers, form books and paper; the girl's eye had quickly noticed that, in pushing back the telephone arm, the hook of the receiver would brush this. By deft manipulation . . .

She pushed it petulantly away, and, as she had hoped, the pile of books caught the hook, so that the receiver was not resting squarely in it. To one unpracticed in the use of the instrument the difference would not have been noticeable; nevertheless the effect was to summon the person at the other end to his receiver. And thus, three miles away, the bell was sounding in Harry Grant's wayside office. He hurried to the receiver.

"Hello!" he called. "Is that you Edna?" He repeated his call twice; and then, in sudden apprehension, listening intently, he heard the faint click-click of the girl's typewriter.

Meanwhile the girl had begun to write her message.

"This is to certify," she wrote, and read, "that I—I?" she looked up inquiringly.

"My monaker, Miss? Menzies—Hard Luck Menzies is what they calls me. I guess we'll let it go at that."

"That I, Hard Luck Menzies, have robbed this office of all the bills that were in the desk, and have likewise stolen the registered mail, during Mr. Keyes' absence." She breathed a huge sigh of relief. Now at all cost she must detain him a few moments. "That means ten years for interfering with the government mails," she said, half incoherently.

"Hell!" answered Menzies irreverently. "Is that all? Go on. 'And I'll meet you all in—heaven.' Now gimme the pen and I'll put my tag to it."

He signed and then, snatching the fire ax, with a few well-directed blows put the telephone out of commission and, buttoning his coat round him, leaped through the window.

As the typewriter ceased and the crash sounded over the wires the man at the other end leaped for his telegraph instrument.

"Robbery at Bainesville," he clicked over the keys. "A woman killed. Telephone Uniondale and all stations." Then he collapsed in his seat and his face went white. But he did not leave his instrument until the answer came.

"How do you know?"

"I got her last message. Morse code on typewriter in front of open 'phone."

That was how "Hard Luck" Menzies came to step into the arms of a posse at Crosstown.

The fragrant flower proclaims itself in sweetness.

Nice Mixture.

Disraeli appears to have been endowed with a most accommodating digestion. When he visited Spain in 1830 he wrote his mother glowing accounts of "the most agreeable dish in the world—an olio. I will explain it to you, for my father would delight in it. There are two large dishes, one at each end of the table. The top one contains bouilli beef, boiled pork sausage, and black pudding. The other is a medley of vegetables and fruits, generally French beans, caravanseras, and whole peas. Help each person to a portion of the meats, and then to the medley. Mix them up in your plate together, and drown them in tomato sauce. I have eaten this every day; it is truly delightful."

When Napoleon Was Expected.

The belfry of Wrabness church, in Essex, England, looks more like an ancient summer house than a belfry. Its chief interest lies in the fact that it contains two huge saws made at the time when Napoleon was supposed to be on the point of invading England. These saws were to be used for cutting down trees, with which the roads were to be blocked against the invaders. This, however, was but one of many means which were devised to repel the invaders. Perhaps better known are the series of curious Martello towers which dot portions of the southern coast of England and the military canal, which runs from Hythe to within a short distance of Hastings.

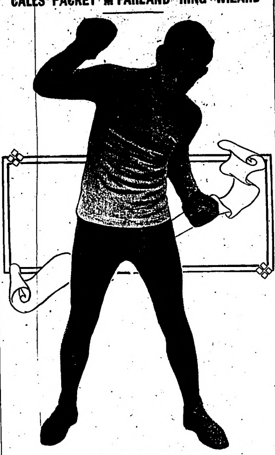
Prolonging Life.

A year ago hundreds of adventurous persons were paying $100 each for the sensation of a short ride in the air. Today an aviator on Long Island, who owns one of the largest monoplanes in the country, is making a business of flights for anybody and everybody at the popular price of a dollar a throw. Guess we will wait for a further decline in the price, and then take a trolley-car trip.—Boston Globe.

Truth.

A mood is that which turns yesterday's truth into today's falsehood.—Life.

CALLS PACKEY M'FARLAND "RING WIZARD"



Packy McFarland, Stock Yards Lightweight.

Packy McFarland of Chicago, known throughout the pugilistic world as the "stockyards champion," because of his being the idol of that section of the western city, is rated by boxing experts as the "wizard of the ring," says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. McFarland is a fistic marvel. Now at the age of 24 years, he is accumulating a fortune rapidly and has set his plans to make $100,000 in the next year. This is to be done by a combination of his brains and hands.

McFarland has gone about his ring contests the same as a contractor assumes a contract. If the task can be completed in three days the brainy contractor realizes that it is folly to waste six, and submit his machinery to unnecessary wear. It is the same with McFarland. If he sees that a bout can be ended in three rounds he rarely fights ten, but if in trying to end the bout quickly and decisively he feels he is endangering his tools, which are his hands, why, he simply wins by the scientific route.

It is that element of uncertainty which has made McFarland the magnet to attract ring-goers. His science at times is bewildering and ardent followers of the game are ofttimes at a loss to follow his plan of attack and defense.

McFarland has been boxing eight years, has fought more than 100 battles, ranging from one round to twenty-five, and in that time has never taken the count. He started his career by knocking his opponents out in short order, winning his first six contests in that decisive fashion, all being won inside of six rounds. He continued his knockout record in the second, third and fourth year of his ring career, winning 27 out of 37 contests that decisive fashion.

It then began to dawn on McFarland that a skilled mechanic would be at loss without his tools, and he realised that he must nurse his hands, not slug and try to knock a man's head off with each punch, but deliver his blows scientifically, block those of the slugger and avoid punishment. Like all men who have studied real boxing, he soon discovered that it was far more pleasant to give than receive.

From that day McFarland has truly been the wizard of the ring. He is proud of his defense and only during the last year, when a New York slugger reached him and blacked one of his eyes, McFarland was so ashamed of the discoloration that he passed up a $1,000 six-round engagement. No man had ever blacked his eye before, and it is said he remained indoors, away from his friends, until the discoloration had disappeared.

SNODGRASS HOLDS HIS JOB

Will Not Be Fired for Muffing Fly in Recent World's Series—Error Excusable, Says McGraw.

Persistent reports that the New York Giants would dispense with the services of Fred Snodgrass as a result of his costly error in the last world series game are set at rest in a statement given out by John J. McGraw, manager. He says:

"I do not blame Fred Snodgrass in the least for his failure to catch that fly ball in the last game of the world series at Boston. Snodgrass is a valuable and conscientious player, and he will be a member of the Giants next season. His failure to make the catch is something that would happen but once in a thousand cases, and I want to say that he is deserving of sympathy for this failure. It hurts him more keenly than it hurts anyone else.

Fred Snodgrass.

"In this connection I may say that I feel even worse for Mathewson than for Snodgrass, as Matty pitched three excellent games without winning any of them. There never was and never will be another pitcher like Matty."

Kraenzlein to Go Abroad.

Alvin Kraenzlein, former coach of the University of Michigan track team, who is one of the greatest all-round athletes ever developed in America, will spend two years abroad. It is possible he may sign to coach some of the European athletes in preparation for the 1916 Olympic games in Berlin.

NOTES of SPORTDOM

Chick Gandil, the Senators' great first baseman, has had his tonsils removed.

Germany Schaefer has received an offer of a job managing an athletic park at Detroit.

Bob Harmon of St. Louis said the Pirate squad was the best in either league this season.

Eastern writers seem to think Evers is anxious to get rid of Tinker. Johnny doesn't talk that way.

Joe Kelly of the Toronto International league team will take his team to Macon, Ga., to train next spring.

When the football regulars are bumped hard the scrubs begin to move about as though they were being overlooked.

Topsy Hartsel's admirers at Philadelphia gave him a dinner when he returned home after a successful season at Toledo.

Joy riding and attacks on the wine crop are to be dismissed on the Athletics' team next season. So says Connie Mack.

Jake Stahl, chaperon of the blushing world's title holders, favors letting the players in on the picture money of post season series.

Several clubs in the Pacific Coast league are after Frank Chance. They should be commended for wanting to improve themselves.

Fans of New Orleans are going to have much boxing in a short time. Another new club is to be started. It will be known as the New Royal Athletic club.

Zbyszko, the Polish wrestler, is after Frank Gotch again. His manager, Jack Hermann, say the Salt Lake Amusement company is ready to post $5,000 for a bout between the two heavies.

New York's Bowling League.

The Eastern Bowling league, run by alley keepers of New York and vicinity, will be made up of eight cities this season—New York, Brooklyn, Trenton, N. J., Newark, Paterson, Jersey City, Union Hill and Hoboken. The best bowlers of each city will roll in the individual and five-team games, the most victorious out of five games in each series winning the championship.

Krug Wants Regular Job.

Marty Krug, the utility infielder of the Red Sox, will probably be seen at short next season in the regular line-up. Krug says it is too hard a task for him to beat out Heine Wagner this year, but he will do his best and try to get in the regular line-up the coming season.

PUNTER AID TO TEAM

Accurate Kicking Is Important Under New Code.

Field Not a Handicap and Criticism of Shortening of the Gridiron to One Hundred Yards Is Misplaced, Says Eckersall.

Although changes in the football rules have met with almost universal approval, there is one alteration in the code which has come in for a lot of criticism. The shortening of the gridiron from 110 to 100 yards has handicapped the punters, and this change is the one which the coaches do not like, writes Walter H. Eckersall in the Chicago Tribune.

Opinion is that the punter does not have a chance to place his attempts as he did under the old code and that the alteration does away with one of the most important factors of the game. This may be true in a certain sense, but a reliable punter is just as essential to the success of a team as he was under the old code. It is admitted that more touchbacks result because of the shortening of the playing field, and the abolition of the onside kick, but an intelligent kicker does not have to kick the ball in a manner which will result in touchbacks.

In the games played this season the usual custom of the punter has been to get the ball away without regard as to where it is going. The punter kicks the ball high and as far as he can. He never thinks of kicking it away from the men in the backfield or placing it in such a manner that the catchers will fumble it. He also never thinks to boot it out of bounds forty or fifty yards down the field.

If these facts are borne in mind and carried out there will be few reasons for criticising the rules committee for shortening the field. If a team is on an opponent's forty yard line it is a whole lot better to boot the ball out of bounds on the opposing eleven's five or ten yard line than it is to drive it over the goal line.

When a touchback results the offending team has the privileges of putting the ball in play by scrimmage on its twenty yard line or punting from the same mark. If the latter is adopted there is no chance to block the kick and the ball generally goes to the opposing team on the thirty or forty line yard.

If the ball is kicked out of bounds on the defensive team's five or ten line the opposing aggregation has a chance either to block the attempt or hurry the kicker in such a manner that he will not obtain the best results from his punt. There are so many possibilities to the result of a punt that the coaches should not overlook the principle of teaching their kickers to either kick away from the men in the back field or boot the ball out of bounds.

The kicking game is a mighty good one, and it has been responsible for many hard fought victories. A man may be able to boot the ball fifty or sixty yards, but the value of his attempt is lessened when the catchers run it back twenty or thirty yards. As the average punter boots the ball from distances ranging from eight to ten yards back of his scrimmage line, his efforts are of little value when he places the oval in a position where it can be caught and run back with apparent ease.

In this connection it is necessary to mention the various forms of defense which are employed to assist the catcher of punts to bring the ball back. Some coaches instruct their players to charge through and attempt to block the kicks. Others teach their men to block their opponents, stay with them, and enable the catcher of the punt to bring the ball back a considerable distance. In many instances the coaches have the defensive half backs and ends check the ends on the kicking side. This is a mighty good move, especially if a fast, clever, sure catcher is stationed in the backfield.

ST. HILAIRE SPECTATOR.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

VOLUME XXXII. ST. HILAIRE, MINNESOTA, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1912. NUMBER 21.

SEN. RAYNOR, OF MARYLAND, DEAD

STRIKING FIGURE IN CONGRESS IS STRICKEN IN WASHINGTON AFTER LONG ILLNESS.

WAS 62 YEARS OF AGE

Held Some Important Committee Position—Was a Life-Long Democrat—Presidential Possibility.

Washington, Nov. 26.—Senator Isidor Rayner of Maryland, one of the leading democratic members of the United States senate and a man whose name was offered to the Baltimore convention by W. J. Bryan as a suitable candidate for the presidential nomination, is dead at the end of a long illness resulting from continued attacks of neuritis.

Senator Rayner had been in a comatose state since last Wednesday with only one or two slight rallies. His severe illness covered a period of about six weeks, dating from the joint political debate with Bourke Cockran at Baltimore late in September. Physicians compelled him to retire from the campaign at once after that and he returned to his Washington home, where he died.

Senator Rayner was one of the striking figures of the senate. He had been a member of that body for almost eight years and was one of its strongest debaters and a recognized authority on matters of constitutional law. Before he entered congress he had attained a national reputation because of his vigorous conduct of the late Admiral Schley's case before the naval court of inquiry that investigated the action of American officers in the battle with Admiral Cervera's Spanish fleet.

Born in Baltimore 62 Years Ago.

Mr. Rayner was a native of Baltimore and was 62 years old. He was a member of the Maryland legislature when 24 years old, and served three terms in the national house of representatives in the period from 1886 to 1892. He was elected to the United States senate in 1904 after having served a four years' term as attorney general of Maryland.

As a member of the committees on foreign relations and the judiciary, Senator Rayner devoted especial attention during the last few years to America's foreign problems and constitutional and legal questions. He was a strong advocate of the abrogation of the treaty with Russia because of that country's discrimination against passports held by American Jews and exercised a marked influence in getting the senate to indorse such action.

Death Causes Senate Tie.

The death of Senator Rayner changes the political complexion of the next senate and swings it from democratic control to a tie. With his vote the democrats had forty-nine, or more than a majority. As the present governor of Maryland, Lee Goldsborough, is a republican, the new Maryland appointee will probably be of that political faith, until the legislature meets in January, 1914. This will give each party in the senate forty-eight votes.

EXPLOSIONS PLANNED

Panama Canal Was to Have Been Dynamited It Is Alleged.

Indianapolis, Nov. 26.—Witnesses at the "dynamite conspiracy" trial testified concerning "wholesale explosions" which the McNamaras were alleged to have contemplated, but which were prevented by the arrest of the dynamiters at Detroit and Indianapolis in April, 1910. The explosions contemplated as told by witnesses, were:

"To blow up the lock of the Panama canal; blow up a building in Pittsburgh occupied by officials of iron and steel contractors who employed nonunion men, and also to blow up offices in other eastern cities; to blow up the aqueduct and waterworks at Los Angeles and to cause other explosions there that would 'make it look like an earthquake'; to blow up a sleeping car to get rid of a stenographer formerly employed by the Iron Workers' union because she 'knew too much.'"

Cars Crash; Eighteen Hurt.

Montreal, Nov. 26.—Eighteen persons were injured in a collision between two suburban trolley cars near here.

Former Wisconsin Senator Dies.

Marinette, Wis., Nov. 26. — Former State Senator H. P. Bird of Wausaukee died at his home, aged 74.

Consul Admits His Guilt.

Duluth, Nov. 26.—V. D. Nicholich, Montenegrin consul and representative in the United States and Canada, pleaded guilty to one of the two indictments returned against him by the November grand jury charging him with grand larceny in the first degree. Nickolich has been held a prisoner in Duluth since Sept. 26, when he was arrested, accused of withholding trust funds from several estates left in his keeping. He will serve from one to ten years at Stillwater.

JUMPS 20 STORIES TO DEATH

SCHOOL TEACHER FEARED "WHITE SLAVERS."

From Papers Left Behind, the Police Conclude She Was Insane.

Chicago, Nov. 25.—Possessed with the idea that she was pursued for dishonorable purposes, Miss Maude Van Dusen, 25 years old, leaped from the twentieth story of the McCormick building ad was crushed to death on the stone paving of an alley at the street level. She jumped from an alley fire escape nearly 250 feet above the ground in view of many pedestrians. Her body struck another fire escape at the first floor and bounded into the alleyway with nearly every bone in it broken.

Miss Van Deusen, according to papers found in her pocketbook which she carried down with her, was a school teacher in Humboldt, Neb. From her papers it appears that she had been seeking a position here and had been obsessed with the idea that she had been in danger from "white slavers." She wrote that she had been driven to appeal to Chief of Police McVeeny and to the federal department of justice and to social settlement workers for protection.

She had prepared for her death by pinning a cross to her bosom, a strip of white linen which had been stained crimson at either end and on which she had printed in large letters, "death before dishonor." She had tied around her neck a copy of the new testament in which she had marked passages in St. John. In her pocketbook was another marked Bible and a typewritten statement of several thousand words which she had entitled:

"Part of my life's history."

"I will die clean if I have to kill myself," it read.

The landlady of the house in which Miss Van Deusen had been rooming said that the young woman had been without employment for some time.

"I am trying to write this without the least emotion," her typewritten statement began, "and, though the following statements may seem dramatic, your reason will assure it that they contain only common sense.

"First, I have very little money and am not allowed to hold a position. Second, I will accept no money other but that I earn. To be without money is to be exposed to any amount of insult and to fall into the hands of the spiritualist white slave trade.

"If I do not get help it will be a certainty that I cannot escape falling into the hands of the spiritualist white slave trade and that will force me to self-destruction."

The police do not understand what Miss Van Deusen meant by "spiritualist white slave trade."

Currency Reform Hearings.

Washington, Nov. 26.—Plans for extended hearings to receive complaints and recommendations as to the country's currency system were discussed by the sub-committee of the house banking and currency committee which has charge of the preparation of currency reform legislation. The sub-committee was appointed after the authorization of the money trust investigation by the banking and currency committee at the last session.

Get on Thin Ice; Two Children Drown

Badger, Minn., Nov. 26. — Odean Brenden, aged three, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Brenden, and Ablea, aged 3, daughter of Postmaster and Mrs. Charles Petterson, were drowned near their homes, where they got on thin ice.

THE MARKETS.

Twin City Markets.

Minneapolis, Nov. 26.—Wheat, Dec., 81½c; May, 87⅝c; No. 1 northern, 84c; No. 2 northern, 82c; No. 1 durum, 84c; No. 3 corn, 45½c; No. 3 white oats, 29½c; barley, malting, 62c; No. 2 rye, 57c; No. 1 flax, $1.22.

Duluth, Nov. 26.—Wheat, December, 81⅝c; May, 87⅜c; No. 1 northern, 82⅝c; No. 1 durum, 83½c.

South St. Paul, Nov. 26. — Cattle — Steers, $6.45; cows, $4.25@5.25; calves, $3.25@9.00; hogs, $7.00@7.55; sheep and lambs, $3.50@6.75.

Chicago Livestock.

Chicago, Nov. 26.—Cattle receipts, 18,000; market steady to 10c up; beeves, $5.35@10.70; Texas steers, $4.30@5.70; western steers, $5.40@9.10; stockers and feeders, $4.25@7.60; cows and heifers, $2.70@7.45; calves, $6.50@10.25. Hog receipts, 29,000; market slow, generally 5c above Saturday's range; light, $7.35@7.85; mixed, $7.40@7.90; heavy, $7.35@7.90; rough, $7.35@7.55; pigs, $5.50@7.00; bulk of sales, $7.65@7.85. Sheep receipts, 52,000; market weak to 10c lower; native, $3.40@4.30; western, $3.60@4.25; yearlings, $4.60@5.60; lambs, $5.40@7.25; western, $5.50@7.25.

Chicago Grain.

Chicago, Nov. 26.—Although wheat here responded to higher cables today, all commission houses appeared to have orders to sell on the bulge. The fact that war rumors were conflicting tended to bring about a reaction. So also did fine weather for the Argentine harvest. Opening prices were ⅛@¼c to ⅜@⅝c higher. May started at 91@91⅛c, the same change as the market taken altogether, but fell back to 90⅝c. Corn strengthened with wheat. May opened ⅛@¼c up at 48⅛c to 48¼c, touched 48@48⅛c and then rose to 48⅛@48⅜c.

Lightness of offerings caused oats to advance. May, which started unchanged to ⅛c higher at 32⅛c to 32⅜@32½c, climbed to 32⅜@32½c.

Gibson Jury Deliberating.

Goshen, N. Y., Nov. 26.—The jury trying Burton W. Gibson on the charge of murdering his client, Mrs. Rosa Meschik Szabo, on Greenwood lake last July, has deliberated several hours without reaching a verdict. At a late hour they were still out. While Gibson sat in his cell awaiting word from the jury room, his wife, worn by her long vigil, was resting within call at a nearby cottage, after having paced up and down in front of the court house for some time in the rain.

WAR PREPARATIONS DENIED BY POWERS

BELIEVED, HOWEVER, ISSUES OF PEACE OR WAR HANG BY SLENDER THREAD.

MAY SEIZE ADVANTAGE.

Feared Turkey May Profit by Embroilment of Other Countries—Fighting and Cholera Continue.

London, Nov. 26.—The extreme anxiety manifested by all the European governments to deny reports of warlike preparations and to represent the political situation as peaceful and satisfactory is in itself an indication of on how slender a thread the issues of peace and war in Europe now hang.

The danger arises, not alone from the conflicting interests of Austria, Servia and the other powers, but from the possibility that Turkey, following the traditional policy of profiting by the embroilment of the great powers, may adopt an irreconcilable attitude in the peace negotiations.

Beyond the fact that the plenipotentiaries met yesterday nothing is yet known—not even whether an armistice has been arranged. There appears to be a suspension of operations at the Tchatalja lines, apparently by tact consent rather than by formal agreement.

Porte's Methods Irritate.

The semi-official Bulgarian newspaper, Mir, editorially voices the governmental irritation at Turkey's dilatory methods of negotiation and accuses the Porte of deliberately nominating delegates from remote points in order to gain time. This probably refers to Osman Nizami Pasha, the ambassador to Germany, who has just arrived at Constantinople from Berlin.

In the diplomatic field the most important reports are that Servia declines to reply to the Austrian demands until the war is concluded and that Germany has not undertaken to mediate between Austria and Russia. The news that Servia is throwing further obstacles in the way of the Austrian representatives in Prochaska, the Austrian consul at Prisrend, is another disquieting feature.

Fighting continues around Adrianople where the besieging forces are reported to have drawn their investing circle to within two-thirds of a mile of the town.

A dispatch from Durazzo to the Daily Telegraph says the Servians now are about eight hours' march from Durazzo, having reached Ishmi.

Cholera Presses Northward.

The Daily News correspondent, in a dispatch which evidently evaded the strict censorship, says the cholera is pressing northward from Constantinople. Already there are several hundred cases at Mutapha Pasha and the scourge has entered Bulgaria.

The foreign doctors have met to consider what advice could be offered the government respecting precautions against the spread of the disease.

The cholera, the correspondent adds is raging at Adrianople and is spreading among the Servians.

The losses to both Turks and Bulgarians have been enormous, but the demoralization of the main Turkish army has not extended to the garrison at Adrianople, which daily displays desperate gallantry. It has succeeded several times in winning back lost ground, especially on the right bank of Maritza river.

Early Thursday morning, after a fierce night engagement, the Bulgarians entered Karagec, a suburb of Adrianople, where street fighting ensued, and were compelled to retire. The Bulgarian and Servian losses since the beginning of the scene cannot be less than 12,000, killed and wounded. The cholera fighting equipment is hopelessly inadequate.

"Human Bomb" Is Bound Over.

Los Angeles, Nov. 26.—Carl Reidelbach, alias Carl Warr, the "human bomb," was bound over to the grand jury by Police Judge Williams and a few moments later the grand jury was investigating the case. Reidelbach's bond was fixed at $2,000. Reidelbach was not represented by counsel. He took a deep interest in the hearing and frequently interrogated the witnesses. He asserted that he had no intention of exploding the machine last Tuesday.

New Brighton Threatened.

Minneapolis, Nov. 26. — An early morning fire threw residents of the town of New Brighton, just outside of the northeast limits of Minneapolis, into a panic. The fire was in the two-story general store of Otto Schmaltzauer and for a time it seemed as though the entire business section would be destroyed.

Salem Verdict in Abeyance.

Salem, Mass., Nov. 26.—The fate of Joseph J. Ettor, Arturo Giovannitti and Joseph Caruso, charged with responsibility for the murder of Anna Lopizzo in a strike riot at Lawrence last winter, is reported to have been determined by the jury which tried them, but the verdict will not be known until later. Less than an hour after Judge Joseph Quinn had left the courthouse with the announcement that he would not receive the verdict then, the jurors filed from their room and went to their homes for supper.

PREVENTABLE ILLS.

Health Report Shows Results of Work in Minnesota—Statistics for 1911 and 1910.

St. Paul.—The annual report of the state board of health on death statistics shows a market decrease in the number of deaths from so-called preventable diseases. According to Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary of the board, this encouraging showing is due to greater attention to sanitation and the work of preventing diseases by local health officers and a better understanding of the dangers to be avoided by the general public.

The largest decrease is in the totals for diseases of children under five years, there being 1799 in 1910 and only 1,092 in 1911. The educational campaigns conducted by baby welfare associations and similar agencies are given credit or the decrease, although weather conditions may have helped. Typhoid fever shows a decrease from 688 in 1910 to 294 in 1911, diphtheria from 566 to 335 scarlet fever 284 to 190, and polyomyelitis or infantile paralysis from 201 to 59. Smallpox caused 7 deaths each year.

Tuberculosis in both years was the greatest scourge, causing one-tenth of the deaths in 1911 and claiming 200 more lives than in 1910. The next heaviest cause was pneumonia. Following is a summary of the principal causes of death for the years of 1911 and 1910:

	1911.	1910.
Pneumonia	2,221	1,933
Accidents	1,733	1,785

STATE CENSORSHIP.

Minneapolis Women's Organizations Say Vulgar Films Are Shown Here

Minneapolis.—Action will be taken by the Minneapolis Grade Teachers' association and the Woman's Welfare league, jointly, to obtain for Minnesota a strict censorship of moving picture films.

At a meeting at which teachers representing the civic committee of the firstnamed organization and a subcommittee of the Woman's Welfare league on moving pictures, were present, a committee was appointed to carry forward work to obtain legislation this winter that will make for censorship of films in Minnesota.

Action will be taken in Minneapolis to induce the city council or the mayor to co-operate with the committee to the extent of revoking licenses of moving picture theaters which exhibit vulgar films or others which will have a criminal influence.

It was reported at the meeting that recent visits made to some of the moving picture shows in Minneapolis revealed that vulgar shows are being put on. It was stated that only 17 moving picture theatres in the city get their films from concerns that submit their films to the New York censorship board. The other theaters are independent.

The committee appointed to go after the moving picture situation in Minneapolis and in the state is made up of Mrs. T. F. Kinney, T. W. Gilbert, assistant superintendent of schools, and Miss Anna L. Donohue, chairman of the civic committee of the Grade Teachers' association. This committee had a meeting Monday to make plans for its campaign.

It is the sentiment of the committee that a board of censors, members of which would be paid for their services, is required to govern the situation here. It was the concensus of opinion at the meeting held yesterday that the fact that moving pictures are censored in the east is not protecting Minneapolis or Minnesota towns from moving picture films which are injurious to the morals of young people.

Woman 103 Ill on Birthday.

Urges New Land Policy.

Minneapolis.—A new land policy by the federal government in its dealings with the Northwest was urged by Governor Norris of Montana in an address before the conservation congress. If the United States would keep desirable citizens within its borders, the Department of the Interior must release all federal lands in the Northwest, the Montana Governor urged, that immigrants from other states may settle in this section. "Last year 125,000 immigrants crossed the Canadian border," he said. [illegible]

CUYUNA STELL MILL.

Reported At Brainerd That It Is Negotiating for the Barrows Mine.

Brainerd.—It is rumored here that the United States Steel corporation contemplates buying the Barrows mine of the Virginia Iron Mining company at Barrows. This company is a subsidiary of the M. A. Hanna company of Cleveland. The Barrows is hoisting ore and stock-piling and contemplates shipping from 75,000 to 100,000 tons of ore next season. The Northern Pacific railway has built coal tracks to the property in readiness for the coming shipping season.

Work on the Adams shaft in section 30, township 46, range 28, near Oreland and southwest of Deerwood, is progressing. The shaft is on ledge and is being anchored. The next step will be sinking through the ore. A station will be cut at the 100-foot level and a crosscut run. The foundations for the different mine buildings are being laid. As soon as the Adams shaft is entirely completed, it is said, the Foundation company of New York will commence work on the Crow Wing mine shaft south of Oreland.

On the north range the Soo is grading into the Thompson property and providing for additional trackage. At the Armour No. 2 mine, grading is being done by the Rogers, Brown Ore company to provide additional dumping space for their stockpile. At the Cuyuna-Duluth property, at the north end of the Ironton townsite, work on the shaft is being carried on under the direction of Captain William Pascoe. The head frames for the shaft are being prepared, and the engine house is nearly completed and a boiler has been installed.

W. A. Barrows, Jr., who had his offices in Duluth, has removed to Brainerd. Chris Zodow has given an option to G. Roy Johnson on the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 2, township 45, range 30, to drill for a term of three years and to purchase the land, if so desired, at $4,000. Land has been leased to the E. J. Longyear company of Minneapolis in the northwest quarter of section 13, township 45, range 30.

INDIANS PAID DEC. 2.

$72,000 to Be Disbursed During Week at Fond du Lac.

Cloquet. — G. W. Cross, superintendent of Fond du Lac Indian reservation, will disburse $72,000 of government money during the week beginning Dec. 2 being annual payment. Each Indian, to the smallest child, will receive $75 per capita. Last year they each received $10. The increase is in the nature of an experiment, hoping to prove that the Indian is capable of spending wisely the increased sum, and if it is successful the amount given this year, or more, will become the permanent annuity.

The first payment will be at Cloquet, Dec. 2 and 3. Payments are to be made the following days at Sawyer, Brookston, Fond du Lac, Duluth, Superior and Solon Springs.

The government road from Cloquet to the Indian village north of the city has been completed and is an excellent highway. The road was begun last spring and Supt. Cross says that it is likely that next year the government will continue the road to Brevator.

HOLD UP CITIZENS.

Three Masked Men Keep Saloon Crowd Lined Up Against Wall for an Hour.

Glencoe.—Three very bold masked and armed holdup men boldly entered the saloon of Osnek & Jumer, commanded everyone in the place to hand over all his valuables, and for nearly an hour kept their victims lined up against the wall while they robbed everyone who came into the place. Several citizens, among whom were Dr. J. H. Dorsey, Ed Churchill, a clerk, and H. L. Simms, president of the First National bank, entered the building, thinking some joke was being played.

After the robbers had secured about $500 they went outside, hid the money and valuables and entered the saloon of Henry Pulrabak, where they were arrested by the sheriff and marshal. They evidently thought their disguises had precluded and possibility of their being detected.

MONTICELLO RESTORED

MONTICELLO

LODGE and GATEWAY

The MAIN HALL at MONTICELLO

THOMAS JEFFERSON

"GIVE me a house on the mountain top and beneath the forest trees."

So said Thomas Jefferson, patriot and statesman, who wrote the Declaration of Independence of the United States long before he had come into the possession of the estate that is set high on the hills near the town of Charlottesville, Va. And he made his wish come true, for when the estate crowned by the hill known as Monticello, "the little mountain," came to him by inheritance, Jefferson brought into being a mansion that was a century ahead of its time in conveniences and ingenious contrivances and from the designs of which the great architects of today fashion the country homes of wealthy Americans. Monticello is indeed a permanent and magnificent monument to the creative genius of the great statesman.

This historic spot has been restored by its present owner, Congressman Jefferson M. Levy of New York, in whose family it has now been for more than eighty years. It is now in as nearly the same condition it was in Jefferson's day. This is the result of years of search for its original furnishings, and a visit to this great mansion is replete with memories of him who fashioned it and brought for its decoration the works of the greatest artisans of France.

Timely interest attaches to Monticello because of the active efforts of Mrs. Martin W. Littleton and others to prevail upon congress to buy the estate, while Mr. Levy is determined to retain it, both because of the loving care bestowed upon the property by his family and the fact that the public enjoys admission to it as fully and freely as though it were owned by the nation.

Down at Shadwell, which lies in the valley of the Rivana river, two miles from the foot of the little mountain, where Jefferson lived when a lad, they still relate the story of the boy's ambition to some day build a beautiful home on the top of the mountain that overshadowed the lowland wherein was his parental home, and how, finally, he came into possession of Monticello and realized one of his boyish dreams.

The great dome of the mountain did not offer sufficient room for the mansion he had conceived, and ten years of labor with head, heart and hands elapsed before the crest of the hill had been leveled. Seven years more it took to crown this man made plateau with the magnificent mansion to which presidents, princes and the people have made common pilgrimage to pay homage to the memory of the man whose wonderful mind and tireless energy found time from the affairs of state to evolve one of the most remarkable specimens of Colonial architecture in existence.

Monticello lies about two miles south and five miles west of the busy little town of Charlottesville, and it is upgrade every inch of the way.

Through a typical Virginia town you soon strike into a road barren of houses on either side and you learn from this the first lesson of what the present owner has done to preserve the sanctity of the Jefferson home and estate. From close to the town boundary hundreds of acres on both sides of the road have been bought by Mr. Levy, "to prevent," as he puts it, "the building of any shacks on the approach to Monticello."

Soon you drop to the level of a rippling creek that skirts the base of Monticello to reach the Rivana river, and then begins the climb—winding, turning, twisting around the face of the hill under overarching trees growing so closely together that the sky is visible only in patches.

For three miles this road, which was surveyed and laid out by Jefferson, rises steeply toward Monticello until a sharp turn brings the visitor to the wrought-iron entrance gates that hang between massive brick pillars at the gatekeeper's lodge.

When the visitor has passed into the inclosed grounds the gatekeeper follows up the road a few yards where, to the right, hangs a big brass bell that Jefferson placed there to announce the arrival of guests. Neither by day nor by night has any one ever passed through those gates whose presence has not been announced to those in "the big house above" by the ringing of this bell, a quaint custom that has survived a century and a half.

A turn of road brings into view the old burial grounds of the Jefferson family where lie the mortal remains of Thomas Jefferson, his wife, mother, sisters and other members of the Jefferson and Randolph families. In loving tribute, too, the remains of many of the artisans Jefferson brought from Europe to help build his mansion are interred in this plot.

Leaving the grave to the majestic solitude of the forest which surrounds it, the visitor follows the winding road still upward through a magnificent park of oaks, maples and pines until an abrupt turn in the path brings him to the main entrance to the Monticello mansion. To the right, on a lower terrace, is a quaint old mansard-roofed house, built by Jefferson before the mansion was completed, and it was the loom house, where the cotton, linen and woolen cloths for the Jefferson household were woven and spun.

Turning to the left, the first view of Monticello shows the "President's walk," a causeway of imposing simplicity in which several sets of marble steps break the slight incline to the plateau above. On one of these are placed two massive marble lions that guard the immediate approach to the house.

Passing up the "President's walk," flanked by neatly trimmed bay trees, the visitor is brought to the main grounds, the plateau that took ten years to level on the mountain top.

A spacious veranda with tessellated floor leads to the reception hall, a cool, stately room where formal tranquillity is evident in the unusual height of the ceiling, an air of spaciousness and general atmosphere of refinement. The hall is so large and the door of such generous size that a coach and four might be driven through. Just at the entrance, deeply cut into the floor, there is the print of a horse's hoof that was made when the British General Tarleton raided Monticello and rode up the marble staircase, through the magnificent hall and out through the salon on his fruitless search for Jefferson.

To fully describe the curios and relics that are unfolded to the gaze of the visitor would fill a volume. There are so many and each has its story of historic association, all deeply interesting and in all forming a collection that would stock a good-sized museum.

Standing in the entrance one faces the gallery which half encircles the hall—a gallery so gracefully proportioned that Stanford White, the noted architect, declared "the beauty of that gallery may never be reproduced, especially the railing, for every portion of it was made by hands whose art is nearly lost in the modern machine era."

In one corner of this hall is Jefferson's old music stand. Made of walnut, it is almost black from age, and there is pasted under the music shelf a bit of paper upon which Jefferson signed his name.

Next to this rack is a column and capital, the original casts of the model designed by Jefferson from which the pillars of the Capitol were fashioned.

In this corner is the coffee urn Jefferson used during his administration at the White House and in Paris when he was ambassador to France.

Stepping between double glass doors, that have an ingenious mechanism for opening that would be a credit to modern housebuilding craft, the visitor enters the grand salon, an octagonal room with six French windows that reach from floor to ceiling. Here the impression is felt at once of delicate but luxurious refinement. Priceless treasures of art, relics of Jefferson and heirlooms of the Levy family, are stored in this high-ceilinged room.

This salon is, indeed, a room of wonders. Modeled after the state apartment of Louis XIV, it differs from that only in color scheme, for Jefferson chose red for the basic tone in preference to the original green.

Much has been written of the simplicity of Jefferson. To many Monticello signifies only a fine example of Colonial America roominess and comfort. In fact, Jefferson furnished his mansion not with crude manufactures of the Colonies, but fitted his home with all the ornate richness of the finest palaces of continental Europe. And, as in the decorating and furnishing of the building, he was equally esthetic in his care for the creature comfort of his guests.

Most of the things that were in Jefferson's study have been lost track of, but Mr. Levy still has a few, and on one corner of the floor there remain thousands of ink stains made by Jeffersons' flipping off the superfluous ink from his quill.

Of the original articles there remain a flat writing table made by Jefferson, upon which it is said he made the first draft of the Declaration of Independence.

When Jefferson died his relatives and heirs decided they could not afford the great expense of keeping open the house as it then stood. Much of the furniture and furnishings were distributed by will, gift or purchase. Mrs. Martha Jefferson Randolph, daughter of the statesman and executrix of his will, decided to continue her home at Edge Hill, the Randolph estate, and was anxious to dispose of Monticello. The place was sold to James T. Barclay, a missionary, who held it but a short time and then offered it for sale.

Commodore Uriah Phillips Levy, then a lieutenant in the navy, drove from New York city to Monticello to inspect the property and concluded a deal by which he acquired from Barclay the Jefferson mansion and 218 acres of the original estate. It was run down from lack of attention and there was little or the original inside furnishings left. Sentimental reasons prompted the commodore to get back the things that had belonged to the man who built the wonderful house, and for years he sought to regain the articles that had been scattered about the country.

Then came the war of the states, and the commodore, continuing his allegiance to the Union, was declared an "alien enemy" by the Confederacy, the estate was confiscated and the contents advertised for sale at public auction. Again the mansion was partly stripped of its furnishings, and many pieces of furniture were sold at the confiscation sale to families residing in the neighborhood. Some of the articles were returned after the war.

After the war, however, when legal adjustment of the estate of Commodore Levy was had and Jefferson M. Levy inherited the property, Mr. Levy continued the labors of the commodore in restoring the home as Jefferson had planned and left it.

A majority of the articles were recovered, but those pieces that had been taken from the country were beyond reach and few of them were traced. With this as his nucleus, however, Jefferson M. Levy made thorough search of family records and documents, as well as getting information from living friends and relatives who had known the home when Jefferson lived, and from that list he has since attempted to get in his many trips abroad exact duplicates of the works of art, furniture and ornaments originally brought from France by Jefferson. In this Mr. Levy has succeeded with considerable accuracy, fitting up Monticello so exactly as it was originally that Thomas Jefferson might step into the home in spirit and find it familiar with objects intimate with his earthly residence.

FOUND SAFETY ON THE SEA

About the Only Way Governor Wilson Could Escape From Importuning Politicians.

When Gov. Woodrow Wilson wanted to sidestep the Democratic politicians long enough to write his speech accepting the presidential nomination he accepted the offer of his old friend, Cleveland Dodge and went to sea upon the latter's yacht. No reporter could get at him; no emissary from Tammany could win near enough to ask a question, and his good nature gradually recovered from the weeks of continual worry. When he landed he first wanted to play golf and then to talk politics.

"One of the first men I ever played golf with was Cleveland Dodge," said Mr. Wilson. "We told each other stories of those early days upon the yacht the other night. Neither Mr. Dodge nor myself had any more than a theoretical knowledge of the game and our first performances were unique.

"'The trouble is,' said Dodge,' that we haven't the right sort of clubs. I'll import some.'"

"So he sent to Scotland and got an invoice on the finest golf clubs that money could buy. There was an instrument for every possible golfing contingency. When they reached the custom house the officials did not know how to classify them. They knew almost as little about golf as Dodge and myself, and there had been no provision made in the law for an import duty on golf clubs. Finally they levied on them as agricultural implementah.

"'That,' said Dodge, 'is a deliberate insult.'

"The next day he went on the links with his new clubs. When he returned that night he had changed his mind.

"'Those customs officers knew more about the game I play than I did,' said he."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

In the PUBLIC EYE

CRUSHED AN EMPIRE IN FOUR DAYS

Military experts are eagerly looking up details as to the career of Savoff of Bulgaria, conqueror of the Turks. In four days, out of the shadows of the Balkans, he has risen to eminence among European military commanders. His campaign in Thrace, leading southward in a series of desperately fought and brilliantly maneuvered battles to the gates of Constantinople, has written a new chapter in the science of warfare.

The great "turning movement," the speed with which he moved his forces, his marvelous success in keeping his heaviest artillery apace with infantry and cavalry are all separate chapters of a dramatic war yet to be written.

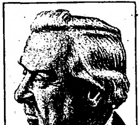
Turning to the man himself, there is the most meager information concerning him. The situation called for one of his abilities and he responded. All that is known of him is that he is yet a young man, being only forty-two years old. He is a native Bulgarian, a graduate of the Bulgarian military school, who later took special courses in military science at St. Petersburg, Paris and Berlin. He is of medium height, dark like all Slavs, lithe, sinewy, endowed with tremendous energy, impetuous and gallant.

In camp Savoff is 100 per cent pure soldier. In drawing room and salon he is a courtier—handsome, polished, a favorite with the ladies, a splendid figure of a man with hair and eyes as black as night and a delicate upturned mustache also colored like the raven.

Until the outbreak of hostilities Savoff was colonel of the Ferdinand or King's Own regiment of Bulgaria. This position at court may have been responsible primarily for his selection to command the army of Bulgaria at the opening of the campaign, but the results show how well placed was King Ferdinand's confidence.

It is recorded of Savoff that long ago when he first began his military career he planned his campaign against Turkey.

ASQUITH DEFINES ENGLAND'S POSITION



Speaking at the new lord mayor's inaugural banquet the other night, Prime Minister Asquith made the emphatic statement that he believed it to be the general opinion of Europe that the Balkan states should not be robbed of the fruits of their victory.

Premier Asquith referred to the unsuccessful efforts of the powers to prevent the conflict and to the great changes the war had made in the map of Europe, and continued:

"In these anxious times it is satisfactory to be able to announce that the relations of England with the other powers, without a single exception, were never more friendly and cordial.

"The great powers are working together with a closeness of touch and a frankness of discussion which is remarkable and which may seem almost unintelligible to those who believe that because, for certain purposes, the powers have been and are ranged in different groups, they must, therefore, in a time of European crisis, be arrayed in opposite camps

"The map of Europe will have to be recast, and nowhere is there a disposition to belittle the magnitude of the struggle or dispute the decisiveness of the result

"England has no direct interest in the exact form which the political and territorial redistributions may ultimately take. The special relations of the other powers, geographical, economic, ethical and historical, with the scene of the conflict, are such that they cannot be expected not to claim a voice when the time comes for a permanent settlement.

"For the moment, and as long as the state of belligerency continues, his majesty's government deprecates the raising and pressing of isolated questions, which, if handled separately and at once, may seem likely to lead to irreconcilable divergencies, but which may assume a different—perhaps a more practical—aspect, if they are reserved to be dealt with from a wider point of view in the general settlement."

WOULD PENSION ALL U. S. MOTHERS

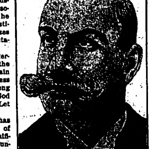
That each woman who bears a child shall receive a pension of $25 is one of the provisions of a bill which Mrs. Ellen Spencer Mussey, the dean of the Washington College of Law—the only exclusively women's law school in the country—is advocating before congress.

Mrs. Mussey's bill contains a number of unique provisions, all putting a premium on motherhood. She would provide the mother not only with $25 for every child born, but would have the government allow mothers $2.50 a week for three months before and three months after the birth of a child. In addition to this a woman forty-five years old with six children should also get a pension, the amount not yet being named.

Mrs. Mussey, in discussing her bill, said that much of the blame for the white slave traffic in this country could be laid to the failure of mothers to properly instruct their growing daughters.

The sponsor for this bill is one of the most prominent women in professional life in the United States. She has been a practitioner before the Supreme Court of the United States for fifteen years, and she was at one time a member of the school board of Washington and was the most prominent figure in that board.

DR. EMIL HIRSCH FAVORS PORK CHOPS



Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, preaching to the young Jews of Chicago, who are "departed from orthodoxy and lacking religious anchorage," under the auspices of the People's Synagogue association, created a sensation when he denounced the devotion to "superstitious observance that characterizes orthodoxy in some of its manifestations, and said:

"I urge you that, instead of pondering about the observance of the dietary laws, abstaining from certain foods, you lead lives of righteousness and help to spread our religion among the people. We believe in one God and that God in spiritual form. Let us carry his word to our brethren.

"The Reformed Jewish church has nothing to do with obsolete forms of religion. It has to do with the unification of the peoples of the earth under one God, and the koshering of meat is far less important in our scheme of things than the rescue of human beings from moral, intellectual and spiritual chaos.

"The pork chop is just as much my meat as your meat or any man's meat. The only thing I have against pork chops is their price. No superstition that tabooes pork has any terrors for me or any other reformed Jew.

"We have nothing to do with ancient and abandoned tribal Juju. We do not believe that the hog was the ancestor of any branch of the Jewish race, and this is the basis of the superstition that tabooes pork in orthodox circles.

TRY TO DO TOO MUCH

ERROR MOST WOMEN MAKE WHEN HOUSE CLEANING.

To Lay Out a System and Do the Work One Room at a Time is Better Than Upsetting the Whole House.

Winter, with its attendant duties in household affairs, means that the woman who has system in her plans will accomplish more work and have more satisfactory results than the erratic, makeshift housekeeper, who cleans because she is expected to do so, and whose work speaks for her incompetence.

House cleaning should not be a matter to be feared, and it decidedly should not disrupt the home and verify the "eating from the mantelpiece" joke.

The first rule is to plan the time to be given to the work and to do one room at a time. This will insure thoroughness, and will allow a part of the day for rest, so that a wreck of a woman need not greet the homecomers at night. Most women are enthusiastic, and when one room is cleaned feel that they might as well go through the suite. This is the error for which they pay later on.

The easiest way when cleaning the furniture which has been covered is to remove the linen coverings and place in a tub of water to which naphtha or borax has been added. While these additions are doing the washing for you the furniture should be taken out of doors and thoroughly brushed with a stiff brush. If the covering be durable, a beating with a rattan beater should be given.

The woodwork should be wiped off with warm water and a chamois.

Paints should be cleaned, and you have no idea what an extra coat of enamel on white paint or varnish on other wood will do.

Wallpaper can be cleaned by wiping it with breadcrumbs. Art gum or kneaded rubber will do this work, as also will bread dough that has not much lard in it.

Carpets or rugs after a thorough cleaning can be brightened by wiping over the surface with water to which ammonia has been added.

Gas globes are also brightened by a bath in soapsuds and ammonia.

The curtains and other hangings are easily cleaned, and the furniture moved back. Just a hint: Change the arrangement of the chairs, and the room will seem to take a new life and an added attraction.

Then rest! One room at a time remember. Perhaps it will take two weeks. What of it? Does not a good temper, a rested body, the knowledge of work well and thoroughly done warrant "making haste slowly?"

Try the slow and sure method this year.

Cheese Puffs.

This is a good way to use up odd pieces of pastry and stale scraps of cheese. One egg and one extra yolk, two ounces of butter, three ounces of grated cheese, salt and pepper to taste and a quarter of a pound of pastry. Break the egg and extra yolk into a basin and beat them well. Melt the butter and add it slowly to the eggs, also the grated cheese and a pinch of salt and pepper. Roll out the pastry very thin, then stamp it with a cutter the size of a wine glass top. Spread a little of the cheese mixture over one round, leaving a narrow border of pastry around: brush the edge of a second round with a beaten egg or water, lay it over the mixture and press the edges together. Lay on a slightly greased baking tin, bake in a quick oven about ten minutes. Sprinkle them over with grated cheese and serve.

For Curtain Stretchers.

Any woman who has not a set of curtain stretchers and has a set of quilting frames on hand, can make them in the following way: Buy some fine wire nails one-inch size, and put a row of them along one edge of your frames as far apart as the scallops of your curtains. Then secure your frames at the corners and stretch your curtains on the small nails. After all your curtains are done, remove the nails, as they are liable to rust if left in, and it is very easy to tack nails in the old holes when next you want to use them.

Pie Stand.

A very convenient receptacle for cakes and pies is made from a box. Stand the box on end and place strips at equal distances along each side inside the box. Let these support light pieces or strips of boards. This allows for the placing of a number of pies one above another and saves space. By removing one or more shelves cakes may be placed in it. This can be easily moved from room to room, or even taken on an outing. The front may be closed by either a screen or solid door as used on a cupboard.

To Freshen Curtains.

Take several newspapers and paste the edges together, then stretch the curtains to be cleaned on them, putting a good amount of flour between each curtain, roll up in a tight bundle, tie and lay away for a week or so. Then shake out well and hang out on the line while you dust out all flour with a clean whisk-broom.

Homely Hint.

Wax candles which have become dusty or soiled can be made perfectly white by rubbing them with a clean piece of flannel dipped in spirits of wine.

Appetizer Clareridge.

Heat thin slices of smoked sturgeon in butter, in skillet. Serve on small slices of buttered toast.

Camphor for Silver.

A lump of camphor kept near silver when not in use will prevent its tarnishing.

When.

When a doctor's bill is smaller than it was expected to be the man who gets it begins to feel that there is some joy in living after all.

"And Yet This Moment He Asked a Hundred for It."

SYNOPSIS.

George Percival Algernon Jones, vice-president of the Metropolitan Oriental Rug company of New York, thirsting for romance, is in Cairo on a business trip. Horace Ryanne arrives at the hotel in Cairo with a carefully guarded bundle. Ryanne sells Jones the famous holy Yhiordes rug which he admits having stolen from [illegible] at Bagdad.

CHAPTER IV.—(Continued.)

Some light steps, a rustle, and he wheeled in time to see a woman open a door, stand for a minute in the full light, and disappear. It was she. George opened the door of his own room, threw the rug inside, and tiptoed along the corridor, stopping for the briefest time to ascertain the number of that room. He felt vastly more guilty in performing this harmless act than in smothering his mentor.

There was no one in the head-porter's bureau; thus, unobserved and unembarrassed, he was free to inspect the guest-list. Fortune Chedsoye. He had never seen a name quite like that. Its quaintness did not suggest to him, as it had done to Ryanne, the pastoral, the bucolic. Rather it reminded him of the old French courts, of rapiers and buckles, of powdered wigs and furbelows, masks, astrologers, love-intrigues, of all those colorful, mutable scenes so charmingly described by the genial narrator of the exploits of D'Artagnan. And abruptly out of this age of Lebrun, Watteau Moliere, reached an ice-cold hand. If that elderly codger wasn't her father, who was he and what?

The Major—for George had looked him up also—was in excellent trim for his age, something of a military dandy besides; but as the husband of so young and exquisite a creature! Out upon the thought! He might be her guardian, or, at most, her uncle, but never her husband. Yet (O poisonous doubt!), at the table she had ignored the Major, both his jests and his attentions. He had seen many wives, joyfully from a safe distance, act toward their husbands in this fashion. Oh, rot! If his name was Callahan and hers Chedsoye, they could not possibly be tied in any legal bonds. He dismissed the ice-cold hand and turned again to the comforting warmth of his ardor.

He had never spoken to young women without presentation, and on these rare occasions he had broached the weather, suggested the possibilities of the weather, and concluded with an apostrophe on the weather at large. It was usually a valedictory. For he was always positive that he had acted like a fool, and was afraid to speak to the girl again. Never it failed, ten minutes after the girl was out of sight, the brightest and cleverest things crowded upon his tongue, to be but wasted on the desert air. He was not particularly afraid of women older than himself, more's the pity. And yet, had he been as shy toward them as toward the girls, there would have been no stolen Yhiordes, no sad-eyed maiden, no such thing as The United Romance and Adventure Company, Ltd.; and he would have stepped the even tenor of his way, unknown of grand passions, swift adventure, life.

George was determined to meet Fortune Chedsoye, and this determination, the first of its kind to take definite form in his mind, gave him a novel sensation. He would find some way, and he vowed to best his old enemy, diffidence, if it was the last fight he ever put up. He would maneuver to get in the way of the Major. He never found much trouble in talking to men. Once he exchanged a word or two with the uncle or guardian, he would make it a point to renew the acquaintance when he saw the two together. It appeared to him as a bright idea, and he was rather proud of it. Even now he was conscious of clenching his teeth strongly. It's an old saying that he goes farthest who shuts his teeth longest. He was going to test the precept by immediate practice.

He had stood before the list fully three minutes. Now he turned about face, a singular elation tingling his blood. Once he set his mind upon a thing, he went forward. He had lost many pleasurable things in life because he had doubted and faltered, not because he had reached out toward them and had then drawn back. He was going to meet Fortune Chedsoye; when or how were but details. And as he discovered the Major himself idling before the booth of the East Indian merchant, he saw in fancy the portcullis rise and the drawbridge fall to the castle of enchantment. He strolled over leisurely and pretended to be interested in the case containing mediocre jewels.

"This is a genuine Bokhara embroidery?" the Major was inquiring.

"Oh, yes, sir."

"How old?"

The merchant picked up the tag and squinted at it. "It is between two and three hundred years old, sir."

To George's opinion the gods themselves could not have arranged a more propitious moment.

"You've made a mistake," he interposed quietly. "That is Bokhara, but the stitch is purely modern."

The dark eyes of the Indian flashed. "The gentleman is an authority?" sarcastically.

"Upon that style of embroidery, absolutely." George smiled. And then, without more ado, he went on to explain the difference between the antique and the modern. "You have one good piece of old Bokhara, but it isn't rare. Twenty pounds would be a good price for it."

The Major laughed heartily. "And just this moment he asked a hundred for it. I'm not much of a hand in judging these things. I admire them, but have no intimate knowledge regarding their worth. Nothing tonight," he added to the bitter-eyed merchant. "The Oriental is like the amateur fisherman; truth is not in him. You seem to be a keen judge," as they moved away from the booth.

"I suppose it's because I'm inordinately fond of the things. I've really a good collection of Bokhara embroideries at home in New York."

"You live in New York?" with mild interest. The Major sat down and graciously motioned for George to do the same. "I used to live there; twenty-odd years ago. But European travel spoils America; the rush there, the hurry, the clamor. Over here they dine, there they eat. There's as much difference between those two performances as there is between The Mikado and Florodora. From Portland in Maine to Portland in Oregon, the same dress, same shops, same ungodly high buildings. Here it is different, at the end of every hundred miles."

George agreed conditionally. (The Major wasn't very original in his views.) He would have shed his last drop of blood for his native land, but he was honest in acknowledging her faults.

Conversation idled in various channels, and finally became anchored at jewels. Here the Major was at home, and he loved emeralds above all other stones. He proved to be an engaging old fellow, had circled the globe three or four times, and had had an adventure or two worth recounting. And when he incidentally mentioned his niece, George wanted to shake his hand.

Would Mr. Jones join him with a peg to sleep on? Mr. Jones certainly would. And after a mutual health, George diplomatically excused himself, retired, buoyant and happy. How simple the affair had been! A fellow could do anything if only he set his mind to it. Tomorrow he would meet Fortune Chedsoye, and may Beelzebub shrive him if he could not manage to control his recalcitrant tongue.

As he passed out of sight, Major Callahan smiled. It was that old familiar smile which, charged with gentle mockery, we send after departing fools. It was plain that he needed another peg to keep company with the first, for he rose and gracefully wended his way down-stairs to the bar. Two men were already leaning against the friendly, inviting mahogany. There was a magnum of champagne standing between their glasses. The Major ordered a temperate whisky and soda, drank it, frowned at the magnum, paid the reckoning, and went back up-stairs again.

"Don't remember old friends, eh?" said the shorter of the two men, caressing his incarnadined proboscis. "A smile wouldn't have hurt him any, do you think?"

"Shut up!" admonished Ryanne. "You know the orders; no recognition on the public floors."

"Why, I meant no harm," the other protested. He took a swallow of wine. "But, dash it! here I am, more'n four thousand miles from old Broadway, and still walking blind. When is the show to start?"

"Not so loud, old boy. You've got to have patience. You've had some good pickings for the past three months, in the smoke-rooms. That ought to soothe you."

"Well, it doesn't. Here I come from New York, three months ago, with a wad of money for you and a great game in sight. It takes a week to find you, and when I do . . . Well, you know. No sooner are you awake, than what? Off you go to Bagdad, on the wildest goose-chase a man ever heard of. And that leaves me with nothing to do and nobody to talk to. I could have cried yesterday when I got your letter saying you'd be in today."

"Well, I got it."

"The rug?"

"Yes. It was wild; but after what I'd been through I needed something wild to steady my nerves; some big danger, where I'd simply have to get together."

"And you got it?" There was frank wonder and admiration in the pursy gentleman's eyes. "All alone, and you got it? Honest?"

"Honest. They nearly had my hide, though."

"Where is it?"

"Sold."

"Who?"

"Percival."

"Horace, you're a wonder, if there ever was one. Sold it to Percival! You couldn't beat that in a thousand years. You're a great man."

"Praise from Sir Hubert."

"Who's he?"

"An authority on several matters."

"How much did he give you for it?"

"Tut, tut! It was all my own little jaunt, Wallace. I should hate to lie to you about it."

"What about the stake I gave you?"

Ryanne made a sign of dealing cards.

"Threw it away on a lot of dubs, after all I've taught you!"

"Cards aren't my forte."

"There's a yellow streak in your hide, somewhere, Horace."

"There is, but it is the tiger's stripe, my friend. What I did with my money is my own business."

"Will she allow for that?"

"Would it matter one way or the other?"

"No, I don't suppose it would. Sometimes I think you're with us as a huge joke. You don't take the game serious enough." Wallace emptied his glass and tipped the bottle carefully. "You're out of your class, somehow."

"So?"

"Yes. You have always struck me as a man who was hunting trouble for one end."

"And that?" Ryanne seemed interested.

Wallace drew his finger across his throat. Ryanne looked him squarely in the eye and nodded affirmatively.

"I don't understand at all."

"You never will, Wallace, old chap. I am the prodigal son whose brother ate the fatted calf before I returned home. I had a letter today. She will be here tomorrow sometime. You may have to go to Port Said, if my plan doesn't mature."

"The Ludwig?"

"Yes."

"Say, what a Frau she would have made the right man!"

Ryanne did not answer, but glowered at his glass.

"The United Romance and Adventure Company." Wallace twirled his glass. "If you're a wonder, she's a marvel. A Napoleon in petticoats! It does make a fellow grin, when you look it all over. But this is going to be her Austerlitz or her Waterloo. And you really got the rug; and on top of that, you have sold it to George P. A. Jones! Here's—"

"Many happy returns," ironically.

They finished the bottle without further talk. There was no conviviality here. Both were fond of good wine, but the more they drank, the tighter grew their lips. Men who have been in the habit of guarding dangerous secrets become taciturn in their cups.

From time to time, flittingly, there appeared against one of the windows, just above the half-curtain, a lean, dark face, which, in profile, resembled the kite—the hooked beak, the watchful, preyful eyes. There were two hungers written upon that Arab face, food and revenge.

"Allah is good," he murmured.

He had but one eye in use, the other was bandaged. In fact, the face exhibited general indications of rough warfare, the skin broken on the bridge of the nose, a freshly healed cut under the seeing eye, a long strip of plaster extending from the ear to the mouth. There was nothing of the beggar in his mien. His lean throat was erect, his chin protrusive, the set of his shoulders proud and defiant. Ordinarily, the few lingering guides would rudely have told him to be off about his business; but they were familiar with all turbans, and in the peculiar twist of this one, soiled and ragged though it was, they recognized some prince from the eastern deserts. Presently he strode away, but with a stiffness which they knew came from long journeys upon racing-camels.

George dreamed that night of magic carpets, of sad-eyed maidens, of fierce Bedouins, of battles in the desert, of genii swelling terrifically out of squat bottles. And once he rose and turned on the lights to assure himself that the old Yhiordes was not a part of these vivid dreams.

He was up shortly after dawn, in white riding-togs, for a final canter to Mena House and return. In two days more he would be leaving Egypt behind. Rather glad in one sense, rather sorry in another. Where to put the rug was a problem. He might carry it in his steamer-roll; it would be handier there than in the bottom of his trunk, stored away in the ship's hold. Besides, his experience had taught him that steamer-rolls were only indifferently inspected. You will observe that the luster of his high ideals was already dimming. He reasoned that inasmuch as he was bound to smuggle and lie, it might be well to plan something artistically. He wished now that he was going to spend Christmas in Cairo; but it was too late to change his booking without serious loss of time and money.

He had a light breakfast on the veranda of the Mena House, climbed up to the desert, bantered the donkey-boys, amused himself by watching the descent of some German tourists who had climbed the big Pyramid before dawn to witness the sun rise, and threw pennies to the horde of blind beggars who instantly swarmed about him and demanded, in the name of Allah, a competence for the rest of their days. He finally escaped them by footing it down the incline to the hotel gardens, where his horse stood waiting.

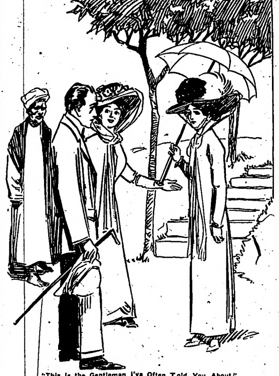
It was long after nine when he slid from the saddle at the side entrance of the Semiramis. He was on his way to the bureau for his key, when an exquisitely gloved hand lightly touched his arm.

"Don't you remember me, Mr. Jones?" said a voice of vocal honey.

George did. In his confusion he dropped his pith-helmet, and in stooping to pick it up, bumped into the porter who had rushed to his aid. Remember her! Would he ever forget her? He never thought of her without dubbing himself an outrageous ass. He straightened, his cheeks afire; blushing was another of those uncontrollable asininities of his. It was really she, come out of a past he had hoped to be eternally inresuscitant; the droll, the witty woman, to whom in one mad moment of liberality and Galahadism he had loaned without security one hundred and fifty pounds at the roulette tables in Monte Carlo; she, for whom he had always blushed when he recalled how easily she had mulcted him! And here she was, serene, lovely as ever, unchanged.

"My dear," said the stranger (George couldn't recall by what name he had known her); "my dear," to Fortune Chedsoye, who stood a little behind her, "this is the gentleman I've often told you about. You were at school at the time. I borrowed a hundred and fifty pounds of him at Monte Carlo. And what do you think? When I went to pay him back the next day, he was gone, without leaving the slightest clue to his whereabouts. Isn't that droll? And to think that I should meet him here!"

That her name had slipped his memory, if indeed he had ever known it, was true; but one thing lingered incandescently in his mind, and that was, he had written her, following minutely her own specific directions and inclosing his banker's address in Paris, Naples and Cairo; and for many passings of moons he had opened his foreign mail eagerly and hopefully. But hope must have something to feed upon, and after a struggle lasting two years, she rendered up the ghost. . . . It wasn't the loss of money that hurt; it was the finding of dross metal where he supposed there was naught but gold. Perhaps his later shyness was due as much to this disillusioning incident as to his middle names.



"This Is the Gentleman I've Often Told You About."

"Isn't it droll, my dear?" the enchantress repeated; and George grew redder and redder under the beautiful, grateful eyes. "I must give him a draft this very morning."

"But . . . Why, my dear Madame," stammered George. "You must not . . . I . . . —"

Fortune laughed. Somehow the quality of that laughter pierced George's confused brain as sometimes a shaft of sunlight rips into a fog, suddenly, stiletto-like. It was full of malice.

CHAPTER V.

The Girl Who Wasn't Wanted.

If any one wronged George, defrauded him of money or credit, he was always ready to forgive, agreeing that perhaps half the fault had been his. This was not a sign of weakness, but of a sense of justice too well leavened with mercy. Humanity errs in the one as much as in the other, doubtless with some benign purpose in perspective. Now, it might be that this charming woman had really never received his letter; such things have been known to go astray. In any case he could not say that he had written. That would have cast a doubt upon her word, an unpardonable rudeness. So, for her very beauty alone, he gave her the full benefit of the doubt.

"You mustn't let the matter trouble you in the least," he said, his helmet now nicely adjusted under his arm. "It was so long ago I had really forgotten all about it." Which was very well said for George.

"But I haven't. I have often wondered what you must have thought of me. Monte Carlo is such a place! But I must present my daughter. I am Mrs. Chedsoye."

"I am glad to meet you, Mr. Jones;" and in the sad eyes there was a glimmer of real friendliness. More, she extended her hand.

It was well worth while, that hundred and fifty pounds. It was well worth the pinch here and the pinch there which had succeeded that loan. For he had determined to return to America with a pound or two on his letter of credit, and the success of this determination was based upon many a sacrifice in comfort, sacrifices he had never confided to his parents. It was not in the nature of things to confess that the first woman he had met in his wanderings should have been the last. As he took the girl's hand, with the ulterior intent of holding it till death do us part, he wondered why she had laughed like that. The echo of it still rang in his ears. And while he could not have described it, he knew instinctively that it had been born of bitter thought.

They chatted for a quarter of an hour or more, and managed famously. It seemed to him that Fortune Chedsoye was the first young woman he had ever met who could pull away sudden barriers and open up pathways for speech, who, when he was about to flounder into some cul-de-sac, guided him adroitly into an alley round it. Not once was it necessary to drag in the weather, that perennial if threadbare topic. He was truly astonished at the ease with which he sustained his part in the conversation, and began to think pretty well of himself. It did not occur to him that when two clever and attractive women set forth to make a man talk (always excepting he is dumb), they never fail to succeed. To do this they contrive to bring the conversation within the small circle of his work, his travels, his preferences, his ambitions. To be sure, all this is not fully extracted in fifteen minutes, but a woman obtains in that time a good idea of the ground plan.

Two distinct purposes controlled the women in this instance. One desired to interest him, while the other sought to learn whether he was stupid or only shy.

At last, when he left them to change his clothes and hurry down to Cook's, to complete the bargain for the Yhiordes, he had advanced so amazingly well that they had accepted his invitation to the polo-match that afternoon. He felt that invisible Mercurial wings had sprouted from his heels, for in running up the stairs, he was aware of no gravitative resistance. That this anomaly (an acquaintance with two women about whom he knew nothing) might be looked upon askance by those who conformed to the laws and by-laws of social usages, worried him not in the least. On the contrary, he was thinking that he would be the envy of every other man out at the club that afternoon.

Hitherto Stranger to Fear

But Now He Had Run Against Something That Caused His Nerve to Forsake Him.

"I came, sir, in answer to your advertisement. You said you wanted to employ a man who was a total stranger to fear."

"Are you a brave man?"

"I am, sir. I have given proof of my courage in many parts of the world."

"Yes?"

"I have faced bullets in Mexico and machetes in Cuba."

"Good!"

"I helped to defend the missionaries against the Boxers, and I was present at the siege of Port Arthur."

"Fine."

"I have fought the infuriated walrus of Baffin bay and the maddened bull elephants of Central Africa, and I went through an Armenian massacre without losing my nerve."

"You seem to be the man I want. Would you be willing to go out on a field in front of 20,000 fair-minded, sport-loving Americans and umpire a baseball game honestly, deciding against the home team when necessary?"

"So that's the job, is it?" replied the man of courage, and broke into a cold perspiration and a run for the door simultaneously.

Quite Unique.

Ray T. Baker, warden of the Nevada penitentiary, is abolishing, with success, all the brutalizing rules of the old-time prison system. Mr. Baker's prisoners lead healthy, industrious lives. They study and they work. And on leaving prison they engage in honest labor. "Our institution," Mr. Baker said to a reporter, "isn't much like a reformatory I once visited in my youth. "'A very strange thing happened in this reformatory back in '89,' a warden said to me. "'Yes? And what was that?' I asked. "One of our prisoners,' he replied, 'reform-'"

Evolution Idea.

Wolff put forth his theory of "epigenesis" in 1759. Lamarck, in 1809, propounded the theory that all animals had been developed from "monad." In 1827 Baer of Konigsberg undertook to prove that all mammals are developed from a "minute egg not a hundredth of an inch in diameter." These were what may be called the beginnings of the theory of evolution. In 1859 Mr. Darwin came along with his "Origin of Species," which he supplemented (in 1871) with his "Descent of Man." In 1873 Haeckel published his "History of Creation," since which time the theory has worked its way throughout the reading world. It is generally conceded that evolution is not necessarily atheistic.

Dog Policeman Travels Beat.

An Irish terrier named Jerry, which has developed a wonderful capacity for police work, is now stationed at Surbiton, England. The terrier, owned by a sergeant of the Metropolitan police, knows all the "beats" in the district, and always accompanies his master when making patrol by cycle. Jerry's "speciality" is in the capturing of stray dogs. These he lures in a friendly manner to the police station, and then mounts guard at the gate until the derelict receives official attention.

Champagne Bottles.

Great skill is required in manufacturing champagne bottles, which must be almost mathematically even in the thickness of the glass. The glass must be perfectly smooth and the necks exact in every particular to insure perfect corking.

BOSTON CHILD KEPT DIGNITY

Matron Meant to Be Kindly, But Youngster Was Not Conversationally Inclined.

This story has been going the rounds of Boston about the ten-year-old son of Director Russell of the Boston opera house.

One evening during an entr'acte at the opera house Master Russell was promenading alone in the foyer, in faultlessly evening dress—a very glass of fashion. A Boston matron, seeing that he was lonely, began to make herself "agreeable."

"You are Director Russell's little boy, aren't you?" she asked, with patronizing sweetness.

Master Russell resented this intrusion on his dignity, but his courtly manners were unruffled. "Yes, madam," he replied, with an elaborate bow.

"Where were you born?"

"In France, madam"—slightly more frigid.

"What part?" continued the lady, feeling the conversation well started.

"All of me, madam."

And he bowed and walked away.—Judge.

HANDS BURNING, ITCHING

905 Lowell Place, Chicago, Ill.—"The trouble began by my hands burning and itching and I rubbed and scratched them till one day I saw little red sores coming out. My hands were disfigured and swollen, and troubled me so that I could not sleep. They were cracked and when the small sores broke a white matter would come out. I could not do any hard work; if I did the sores would come out worse. For two years nobody could cure my eczema, until one day I thought I would try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used warm water with the Cuticura Soap and after that I put the Cuticura Ointment on my hands twice a day for about five or six months when I was cured. (Signed) Sam Marcus, Nov. 28, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston." Adv.

Suiting Himself.

The modern small boy is painfully cautious.

"Would you like to come to our bonfire on the 5th of November?" one was asked.

Back came the answer worthy of a cabinet minister: "Well, if I haven't a bonfire of my own and if my father doesn't take me to Belle Vue, and if I'm not asked to a better bonfire, I'll be awfully glad to come."—Manchester Guardian.

Heredity.

She—Sometimes you appear really manly and sometimes you are effeminate. How do you accunt for it?

He—I suppose it is hereditary. Half of my ancestors were men and the other half women!—Tit-Bits.

The Tender Spot.

"Well," replied the shady police officer, "I have done a great deal toward hurting their feelings by taking their money away from them."

THE DULUTH HERALD
BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald.

The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

The next meeting of the Northern Minnesota Development association will be held at Crookston next Thursday and Friday, Dec. 5 and 6.

Applicants for federal jobs are sending in an average of 10,000 letters a day, thus helping to make easy the way of officials who are struggling to avert a deficit in the postoffice department.

Though Minnesota has the most stringent corrupt practices law of any state in the Union, not a conviction has been had since its enactment. Several arrests have been made, but the charges did not stick. Attorney General Smith has ruled that infractions of the law must be prosecuted by the county attorneys.

Results of the recent election indicate the opinion of the voters of the work done by members of the last legislature. Some seventy odd old members were denied reelection, leaving but forty-nine who will return to continue their work for the state. It was a decided shake up and shows that the people know what they want and when they do not get it they make their feelings known.—Park Rapids Enterprise.

Next Tuesday a special election will take place in the Fifth commissioner district to decide the tie vote at the general election between A. B. Mandt, Republican, and George Leimers, socialist. J. R. Larson, the present republican commissioner, who lost to Mandt, at the primaries, has gotten back into the game, and proposes to run on stickers. This will make a hot fight.

And now it appears that the progressive platform as published differs in two important particulars from the one adapted by the convention. The anti-trust provision was cut out and another committing the government to the policy of cooperating with the trusts in the extension of foreign commerce inserted. Just who was responsible for the changsies a mystery. Mr. Roosevelt did not know of them as his speeches were based on the platform as adapted.

The Parcels Post

The parcels post laws will go into effect Jan. 1. By the provisions of this law it will be possible to send packages through the mail that weigh up to eleven pounds. Possibly this law will compel the express companies to reduce their exorbitant rates. The rate of postage is regulated by distance, and the charges in the different zones will be as follows:

Zones			1st lb.	Each additional lb.	11 lbs.
Rural and city del			5c	1c	$ .15

Distinctive parcel post stamps must be used on all fourth class matter beginning Jan. 1, 1913, and such matter bearing ordinary postage stamps will be treated as held for postage.

The Extra Session

It is amusing to read the objections to an extra session by the standpatters who are mercenarily opposed to a revision of the tariff. President Taft says "I regret that an extra session is to be called to further disturb business." The president's regrets have a dog-in the-manger sound: he wouldn't revise the tariff himself and now he protests against his successor doing it. On the other hand the progressives give the most cogent reasons why an immediate tariff revision should be forthcoming. The fact that President-elect Wilson has appointed April 15, for the convening of an extraordinary session of congress is conclusive proof that he is ready to make good his pre-election promises, which Mr. White House Failure stubbornly refused to do, and for which remissness he has been properly punished. With the progressive democrats and the progressives joining hands on the revision downward, business disturbance will be so short lived that even Mr. Taft, looking backward in 1913 cannot fail to see the deplorable mistake charged up to him. However, Mr. Taft may have been only the instrument, the avenging sword, in the hands of an indignant providence, wherewith to smite the Old Guard hip and thigh, for its most abominable transgressions. Be that as it may, President Taft was the official chief mourner at the G. O. P. funeral where no doubt his tears mingled with those of the rest of the standpatters, bedewing like rain the customary thirty day crape decorated arms of the mourners. —Cass Lake Times.

Potato Diseases

Articles have appeared from time to time warning potato growers against permitting potato diseases to become established. However, during the past season the situation has been more alarming than ever. It is an assured fact that if potatoes are to be successfully grown more attention must be paid to the prevention of diseases. This phase of potato raising has been neglected so long that it is now absolutely necessary to take vigorous measures in order to insure profitable crops in the future.

During the past season a very large number of complaints have been made that potato vines were unthrifty or were wilting and eventually dying. In every case the cause could be attributed to one of two common diseases: the internal brown rot, or "rosette." Probably the most common of these was the internal brown rot. The loss in some cases was as much as twenty per cent, and, in a few cases, even greater. Certainly, when preventive measures are, both simple and inexpensive, it is only good business policy to adopt these measures in order to realize the highest profit possible from the potato field.

At this time of the year, of course not much can be done in the way of dealing with diseases. However, since storage conditions determine, in large measure, the amount of rotting in cellars, attention may profitably be called to this phase of the problem.

The fungi causing the wilt diseases in Minnesota may live during the winter in the soil or in the potato tubers. The amount of damage done to the tubers during the winter may be greatly reduced by maintaining proper storage conditions. It has been found that a temperature of about 45 ° F. will effectually prevent the development of the internal brown rot and probably also the other rots. Under conditions of ordinary cellar storage the rots may develop rapidly, paving the way for the entrance of secondary organisms which cause the familiar soft, foul smelling rots. The loss is not confined only to the badly rotted tubers, but indirectly there must be considered to be a great loss from the planting of slightly affected tubers which may show only slight evidences of an abnormal condition.

Too much emphasis cannot be placed on the absolute necessity for taking precautionary measures at once if good crops of potatoes are to be raised. Specific information concerning planting will be sent out before next spring. In the meantime, proper storage conditions should be maintained and plans made to plant potatoes on soil which has grown none for at least six years. —E. C. Stakman, Division of Botany and Plant Pathology, University Farm, St. Paul.

Insurgent Woodmen Win

The insurgent Modern Woodmen of America won an important victory when Judge Robert B. Shirley, in the Sangamon county, Ill., circuit court, granted their plea for an injunction restraining the head officers from putting into effect the proposed rate increase. The decision affects more than 7,000,000 members throughout the United States, as the head offices are located in Illinois.

Good Novels Thrown In

A reader of The Chicago Record-Herald with a mathematical turn of mind has calculated that the serial novels published in that paper in a year represent a saving of from $15 to $18 to its readers. He figures that for the fiction lover it is more economical to subscribe for The Record-Herald than to go without it.

"No other large city daily," he continues, "prints so much of the best new fiction, in addition to all the news of the day. Not counting the innumerable short stories in the Sunday magazine of The Record-Herald, that magazine prints yearly at least four serial novels by some of the best popular authors—Rider Haggard, Conan Doyle, Louis Tracy, George Gibbs, Jeffery Farnol, and others in that class. Then in the body of the paper there is nearly always another good serial, running daily and Sunday, which means a complete new novel every month or two, or, say, eight whole books of high class fiction in a year. At the usual price of $1.50 these twelve novels in book form would cost $18. I get all this thrown in extra with a mighty good newspaper. I call it a bargain.

That is one way to look at it, and it seems to be a sensible way. The real cause of the popularity of The Record-Herald, however, is that it is the best all around home newspaper in the country. adv

Pennington State Land all Sold

Tuesday afternoon State Auditor Iverson, accompanied by Chief Land Clerk Nelson, held what will be the last land sale in Pennington county. The sale occurred at 4 o'clock in the district court rooms and there was a goodly attendance, notwithstanding the fact that the acreage was limited.

The parcels of land listed for sale totaled only about 1800 acres and was all of the state land in the county. The tracts consisted of pieces in the towns of Bray, Sanders, Norden and Numedal, and the entire list was sold before 5:30.—News-Press.

TO FIND FAULT.

People Are Sometimes Paid For That Express Purpose.

You have no idea how many things are wrong in a big business until you are paid to look for them, writes Gelett Burgess in Collier's. There were the clocks, for one thing, when I first began. The girls wore too many rats in their hair, there was grease on the elevator doors, expensive hats were dumped one on another, the ventilation was bad, the boxes on the shelves showed from the street through the show windows and about a thousand other things. Then Spindelheim sold teapots just like our eighteen cent ones for 14 cents, and for a concern like Smith & Co. to be undersold is fatal. There's really nothing that so enrages Mr. Smith; also Rubinstein's window dresser has beaten ours, too, at times. Down it goes in my little report. Wouldn't any woman love my job.

Yes, it's fun to be paid for being a misanthrope, but it's hard work too. At 9 o'clock I begin my promenade through the store—downstairs, upstairs, basement, attic and annex. If a girl at the counter has dirty finger nails or too wide a pompadour to suit me I stop and talk pleasantly, buy 9 cents' worth of edging and so get her number from the sales slip. She never knows anything about it till her superintendent gives her a scolding the next day. I have eyes like a hawk and a nose like a hound and ears like a small boy under the sofa when a young man's calling on big sister. In ten minutes I have spotted the dust in the corner of the aisle, a girl who wears brass bracelets, a porter who is not attending to his duty, a badly arranged counter, an error in spelling on a placard, two store detectives loafing on their job and a hideous combination of colors in the front window. I go to the ladies' room and make a note of these things surreptitiously. I don't dare go there too often, though, for fear I'll be identified, so sometimes I run back to my office, two blocks away. So it goes till about 4 o'clock, hither and thither, high and low, looking for trouble. It doesn't do a clerk any good to be uncivil to me, I can tell you, or to make me wait too long for my change, but I try to be fair, and if I find a particularly willing and considerate sales person down that name goes in my report too. You might suppose that there'd be good graft in that; but, of course, I keep my position only so long as the head of the firm has absolute confidence in my integrity. The funny part of it is that the more I complain the better he likes it. I'm like the opposition party in congress. I'm never satisfied. When I am I'll have to look for another position.

At 4 o'clock I go back to my little office and dictate my report from my notes to a stenographer, and when it's typewritten I send it to the head of the firm.

When "Pluck" Was Slang.

The word "pluck" affords an instance of the way in which slang words in the course of time become adopted into current English. We now meet with "pluck" and "plucky" as the recognized equivalents of "courage" and "courageous." An entry in Sir Walter Scott's "Journal" shows that in 1827 the word had not yet lost its low character. He says (volume 2, page 30), "Want of that article blackguardly called pluck." Its origin is obvious. From early times the heart has been popularly regarded as the seat of courage. Now, when a butcher lays open a carcass he divides the great vessels of the heart, cuts through the windpipe and then plucks out together the united heart and lungs—lights, he calls them—and he terms the united mass "the pluck."—London Notes and Queries.

"That was tough meat you gave me last night," said the customer.

"Oh, run along!" said the dealer. "You will forget it by the time you pay for it."—Buffalo Express.

OBESITY CURED.

A Remedy That Is Not Liable to Attain Wide Popularity.

Peter the Great was once traveling incognito in a part of Finland, when he met a very fat man who told him that he was going to St. Petersburg.

"What for?" asked the czar.

"To consult a doctor about being so fat, which has become very oppressive."

"Do you know any doctor there?"

"No."

"Then I will give you a line to my friend, Prince Menschikoff, and he will introduce you to one of the emperor's physicians."

The traveler went to the prince's house with a note. The answer was not delayed. The next day, tied hands and feet, the poor man was dragged off on a cart to the mines.

Two years after Peter the Great was visiting the mines. He had forgotten the incident of the fat man, when suddenly a miner threw down his pick, rushed up to him and fell at his feet crying:

"Grace, grace, what is it I have done?"

Peter looked at him, astonished, until he remembered the story.

"Oh, so that is you!" he said. "I hope you are pleased with me. Stand up! How thin and slight you have become! Go, and remember that work is the best cure for your complaint!"

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ninety dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due, and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by C. E. Carpenter and Ella A. Carpenter, his wife, and Geo. M. Bleecker and Mary F. Bleecker, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State bank of St. Hilaire, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagees, bearing date the 10th day of Jan., 1910, and duly acknowledged by said mortgagors on June 27th, 1910, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Red Lake and state of Minnesota on the 29th day of June, 1910, at 5 o'clock p. m., in book 5 of mortgages on page 162.

Which said mortgage was after the organization and creation of Pennington county, Minnesota, duly transcribed into the records in the office of the register of deeds of said Pennington county, and recorded therein on the 23rd day of November, 1910, in book 2 of mortgages on page 232;

And Whereas, The said mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of fifteen hundred ninety and no-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum from the 10th day of June, 1912, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, towit: The south one-half of the southeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section two (2) in township one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-four (44) west of the fifth principal meridian, in Red Lake county, Minnesota, now a part of Pennington county, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington county at the east front door of the court house in the city of Thief River Falls in Pennington county in said state on the 30th day of December, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of fifteen hundred ninety dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. 830 D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions in banks and offices this year—had calls for over 500. All Fargo banks and 655 others employ D. B. C. pupils as cashiers, tellers, bookkeepers or stenographers. No other school has such endorsement.

Our $80 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $80 course in Commerce and Banking (endorsed by Bankers' Association), supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the large concerns. The shorthand course (under two expert reporters) trains court reporters and high grade stenographers. The stenographers for the U. S. District Court, N. D. Supreme Court, Third Judicial District and the Cass Co. Court are D. B. C. graduates. Do other schools offer this proof of superior training? [illegible]

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building (300,000 cubic feet of space), is seated with roll top desks, has 100 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. Our pupils deal with each other and with elegantly equipped offices, using aluminum money. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils like them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C." Next term begins soon. For booklet, write F. LELAND WATKINS, Pres. [illegible]

America's Greatest Weekly
THE TOLEDO BLADE
TOLEDO, OHIO
The Best Known Newspaper in the United States
Circulation 340,090
Popular in Every State

No Whiskey Advertising

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it the unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making The Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

Obituary

John J. Soll died at Clarkfield, Minn., Friday, Nov. 15, of creeping paralysis, from which he had been suffering for about a year and a half. He was 49 years of age.

The deceased came to St. Hilaire from Roseau, Minn., in 1896, and was in charge of the Spectator until 1901. He spent several years at Grafton, N. D. He was at one time foreman of a West Superior daily and was one of the best job printers in northern Minnesota. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. and Knights of Pythias orders. His first wife was drowned in the Red Lake river in 1896, while boating. In 1900 he was married to Miss Lyda Monson of Clarkfield, Minn., who was living here at that time. He removed to Kalispell, Montana, about three years ago. His wife survives him. There were no children.

PLAYING THE STOCKS.

He Who Has Knowledge and He Who Gambles on Gossip.

Of the many popular delusions touching Wall street and its people none is more persistent or more dangerous to the outsider than the belief that from nothing great permanent fortunes have been made by shrewd and lucky speculation in prices. It isn't true. We differentiate here between speculation in prices only and the kind of legitimate speculation which seeks to anticipate great economic changes. Legitimate speculation has its translation into prices, too, but it takes, first, original capital in some reasonable proportion to the profits expected and, secondly, the treatment of exceptional opportunity with correct imagination. Its risks at best are very large. Among our Wall street acquaintances are several hard headed men who succeed in making $25,000 a year by speculation. Not one of them has a capital of less than $250,000. They make it earn about 10 per cent.

Take Blank, one of the ablest speculators we know. He has made half a million dollars during the past five years. Very handsome return, you say. Let us look at Blank. He was the chief accountant of one of the big railway systems when an uncle, dying, left him $20,000. Mind you, he was an expert railway statistician and an exceptionally able young man to boot. He knew his own road like a book, as well as some other things that only the directors were aware of. The stock of the system looked cheap to him, and he used his $20,000 to margin 4,000 shares. A bull market was beginning, and within a month or two Blank's capital had increased to $60,000. He was content with a ten point rise, though the stock advanced ten points more. That was the first of Blank's deals. Twelve months later he won again. He thought that the stock of a certain western system was selling below its value and set about an investigation to find the facts. He hired a first class engineer and a retired traffic manager to travel from one end of that railroad to the other, and he himself analyzed the accounts. When all the reports were in it seemed to him that the system was earning enough money to justify an increase of its dividend, and he plunged once more. He waited six months for his point this time, and his investigation had cost him $5,000. He made $50,000. Good interest, you say, but think of Blank's special equipment for the game and the trouble he took to be right. You, Mr. Thinmarginist, after reading the Wall street gossip in your daily paper, adventure your thousand or two thousand dollars and expect to double your money. Mark the difference.—John Parr in Everybody's Magazine.

HOMEMADE ICE CREAM.

Freeze It at Least a Day Before It Is to Be Used.

"The best ice cream is stale ice cream," said the ice cream manufacturer. "You never hear of colic from ice cream among children who have never met the homemade article. It is a queer thing that it would ruin a manufacturer to sell fresh goods, whereas if you know it is homemade and just out of the freezer you will praise it to the skies as being the superior of anything manufactured anywhere.

"If you want your homemade cream to be really good and healthy make it at least a day before you use it. Churn it hard, but not too hard, and then pack it away in salted ice until you are ready to serve it. In this way all the little particles of ice which make homemade cream so gritty and really harmful will have disappeared. The cream will sort of absorb the water that forms the ice, so to speak; consequently your cream will be frozen, not frapped. It is a daring manufacturer who risks his trade by shipping cream less than a week old. Sometimes I store my goods in ice as much as two weeks. That isn't a bit too long, either, although it takes a heap of ice."—New York Press.

GOVERNMENT AID TO TRUSTS.

How the Conservation of Coal Lands Is Playing Into the Hands of the Coal Barons.

Any inquiry into the increased cost of living may not improbably disclose something akin to a government trust running along with the private trusts to corner the necessities of life, says a writer in the Alaska-Yukon Magazine. It is beginning to appear that as fast as the government unnecessarily ties up, corners and sequesters certain classes of natural resources it increases the monopoly of similar resources and thereby tends to increase the cost to the consumer of every pound of nails, every pound of coal and every foot of timber.

Paris' Secondhand Market.

There is a curious old market near Paris in which everything is sold at second hand. Working girls can fit themselves out there from head to foot. As a writer says, "Mimi can sell her old felt hat and buy a straw one, exchange her old dress for a new one and, if she likes, buy a steak and a salad for her dinner, a paper bag of fried potatoes, sweets and some flowers for her window. Democracy is king here, and no more attention is paid to the millionaire who is looking for something marvelous which he may pick up cheap than to the man with the wooden leg who wants a new left boot in exchange for a dozen sardine tins, five gloves and a stocking."

Lorado Taft, who has been awarded the contract for a statue of Columbus to be erected in the plaza of the Union station in Washington and to cost, with a large fountain, $100,000, is nationally known as a sculptor and has been for several years the leading authority on that branch of the fine arts in Chicago.

Gold In Barnato's Body.

A German paper is responsible for the announcement that Barney Barnato, still more than the legendary king of Peru, who was wont to have his body gilded afresh every morning, deserved the title of El Dorado—the "Man of Gold"—not because of his wealth or of his connection with gold mines, but because his system actually secreted gold. He was, says this credible authority, the victim of a disease called metallitis, his blood being permeated with a powdery gold, as were his eyes, nose, ears and all of his mucous membrane. The pain caused by this condition was so intolerable that it is believed to have been the cause of his suicide.

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

G. W. HOOPER

MADE TRAMP MINER'S HEIR

It is not often that a man feeds a stray fowl and has it magically turn into the goose that laid the golden egg, but that is just what has happened to Joe Harris of Knoxville, former auctioneer and member of the Tennessee legislature and now in his old age a poor poultry dealer. Twenty-five years ago Harris fed, clothed and staked a tramp miner, William Robinson, whom he picked up on the streets of Knoxville, and the other day through London solicitors he learned that he is the beneficiary of Robinson's will. The one time tramp died recently in Melbourne leaving an estate said to exceded two million dollars.

When he befriended Robinson Harris was a famous auctioneer and went from city to city through the south conducting sales. He was a picturesque figure. Tall and gaunt, a little stooped, always in frock coat and high silk hat, Harris attracted crowds wherever he went. He had a tremendous stock of funny stories and knew how to tell them so that when he mounted a stand to cry his goods men pushed as close as they could to listen because they were sure of entertainment. He was quick to see funny incidents and could always get back at any wag who tried to be facetious with him. Sales were often delayed until his services could be secured.

He made from three to five hundred dollars every day he worked and sometimes by taking a commission would make as much as $10,500 a day. Generous to a fault, he spent and gave away money as fast as he earned it. No one in distress was ever refused help by him.

One day as he waited for a train in Virginia he saw a woman crying in the station. She held a baby in her arms while a little boy about five years old sat beside her, trying to console her.

"What's the trouble over there?" Harris asked a native of the place.

"She's been turned out and has to go home to her folks," came the answer.

"Why?" asked Harris, touched by the woman's grief.

"Did you see that rich Col. W— at the sale today? Well, he sold her husband a little house for $1,000. They were to pay for it on the installment plan. Her husband died last week owing the Colonel $271, so he turned the woman and the children out because, he said, he knew they could not finish the payments."

"That amount don't represent a day's work for me," said Harris. "Call some responsible man. I'll leave the money to finish paying for the house." Harris was already opening a wallet containing more than $1,000 which he had just made in that particular town. "Let the poor thing stay in her home!"

The train was whistling, and Harris handed over the amount, adding, "I'll be here again Monday and will settle any minor expenses incident to the deal."

The favor was forgotten by Harris until a day or two ago he had a letter from the little boy, now grown to manhood. He had read an account of Harris' good fortune and wanted to congratulate him. He and his mother had never been able to write their thanks for his kindness to them because all they knew of their benefactor was that his name was Harris and that he was an auctioneer. They did not know where he lived.

This was only one of many like incidents in his life. He once gave a beggar whom he found in a pitiable physical condition in the streets of Nashville $150 with which to go to a hospital for treatment.

It was in January, 1887, that Harris met the man who has just left him more than $2,000,000. At that time Harris operated an auction house in Knoxville. As he went into town one morning he stopped by an old freight depot that he had just bought and was having torn down. While he was looking about giving orders to the men at work, he noticed Robinson tip his shabby old hat to him. Harris stopped and looked the man in the face. Robinson was evidently hungry.

"Have you had breakfast, young man?" Robinson was then 28.

"No, sir, I haven't."

"Take this quarter," began Harris, "and go over to Ronner's saloon and get you two drinks. They'll brace you up. Then I'll take you home for breakfast."

At the table Harris offered Robinson $2 a day to oversee the negroes at work on the old depot. Robinson accepted eagerly. When Harris passed the depot at noon he called to Robinson and took him home to dinner. After the meal was over Robinson picked up a violin belonging to Harris.

"Never in my life had I heard such fiddling," declared Harris in an interview last night. "That's the same old fiddle there under my bed. I turned to my wife when he finished playing and I said, 'You can expect this man home to supper tonight. Anybody that fiddles like Robinson here can find lodging as well as food in my house.'"

So the medley played on the old fiddle changed the course of events for both men. Harris can still hear the old tune echoing down the years, but now to the accompaniment of clinking gold.

"You needn't go back to work those niggers this afternoon," Harris told Robinson as they left the house together. "You come to the auction house with me."

It was a new Robinson, freshly shaven and well dressed in new clothes from his shoes to his hat who went home with Harris that night.

When Harris went to Nashville to take his seat as representative from Knox county in the Tennessee legislature he took Robinson with him. Before starting he had his own tailor make Robinson a $45 suit of clothes. Harris had won eight silk hats on Harrison's election and he handed one of them over to his new friend.

"If I wear a silk hat to Nashville you'll wear one too," he said.

They stopped at the old Maxwell house and Harris furnished Robinson with plenty of spending money. Robinson never mentioned his relatives if he had any living. He appeared to be a man of refinement and culture, well able to take care of himself in the company of the legislators and state senators with whom he was constantly associated in the famous old hotel in Tennessee's capital. He was grateful to Harris and warm in his praise of him. He frequently expressed his belief that he would strike it rich some day and be able to return Harris' kindness.

One night as they were having a drink together Robinson declared that he wanted to play the grain market at old Col. Bell's place, and Harris gave him $50 for the purpose. Later Robinson went to the Maxwell house with $1,200 that he had made out of the $50.

"Now, Robinson, you put $1,000 in my friend H—'s bank here in Nashville. It is safe, and you can operate on the remaining three hundred," advised Harris, but a day or two afterward Robinson appeared to be much depressed and finally confessed that he had lost his last dollar on May wheat and was in debt $50 to Col. Bell.

Butte, Mont., was a m[illegible] all fortune hunters, and Robinson was anxious to try his luck there. So Harris paid his debt to Col. Bell, bought him a ticket to Butte and gave him a roll of money. Robinson left Nashville March 10, 1887.

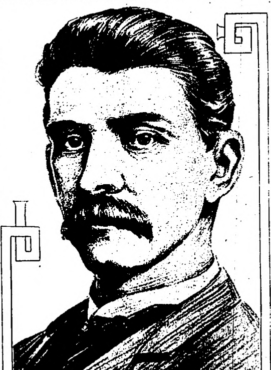
Six years later Harris heard from him. The expressman brought him a package containing $500 from Robinson, who was then at Cape Nome, in the gold fields of Alaska.

Since that time Harris has had many misfortunes. The great strain of auctioneering both indoors and out has almost ruined his voice. He suffers constantly with his throat. No longer able to conduct sales, he is connected with a small poultry business and is forced to live in a very modest way. His wife, still fond of the beautiful things to which she was accustomed until late years, has made their two rooms over an old store bright with window boxes of blooming flowers and green vines.

Everything about the place is neat and clean, but very plain. There are six or eight large bird cages in the combination living and bedroom, for Mr. Harris is a great admirer of songbirds and loves to hear their music.

He does not seem elated over the news of his good luck, but will continue to go about his work as usual until the fortune has actually been turned over to him. As he sat in the light of a little oil lamp on a table beside him, never lifting his eyes from the floor as he talked, he did not appear to be over 50, for his hair and long mustache are still red, with no touch of gray! He is modest about his generosity in the past, constantly declaring that he never did much for charity.

"I never did anything more than I ought to have done," he frequently asserts. "I have made over $100,000 auctioneering."



JOE HARRIS.

He has no children except an adopted daughter, now married, who lives in Kentucky. Since the news of his fortune has gone out over the country Harris has received hundreds of letters, many of them from women who want to marry him. If he is single, they write, please notify them and they will send their pictures.

"The notoriety is the only unpleasant thing about it," he laughed, holding the lamp over his head to light his visitors down the dark hallway of the old building, which he may soon leave for a luxurious home.

Egypt to Preserve Egret.

Mr. Dudgeon, director-general of the department of agriculture, states that the department is interesting itself in the propagation of the white egret, which is a great worm destroyer.

Unfortunately, owing to the trade that is carried on in its feathers, the species had become rather rare in Egypt. A law has now been passed prohibiting the shooting of this bird, with the result that while in the beginning of the year there were only 800 white egrets at Simbellawen there are now about double that number.—London Chronicle.

THE FORTUNE TELLER

Girl Becomes Scientific Palmist for Few Minutes and Tells Own Fortune.

By LESLIE DAVIS.

Zoe Miller, a gay little figure in scarlet with poppies in her hair, had become separated in the crowd from the friends with whom she had come to the fete.

The entertainment was being given for a popular charity, and society was well represented. Gaily decked stalls tempted the purse at every turn, masses of flowers formed a bright background for the fancy costumes of the guests and lively music mingled with the laughter of those who danced.

At Zoe's end of the hall a group pressed eagerly forward to watch the mircles of a fascinating juggler, but Zoe was not tall enough to see his tricks, so she turned aside in search of something more amusing. Over a tent nearby she read, "Madame Adele, Scientific Palmist and Fortune Teller," and, a little wistfully, she passed inside to learn her fate.

"Your hand, mademoiselle." The diviner of the fortune pushed a cushion forward on the table and, with the movement, a pack of cards was scattered upon the floor. As the palmist bent to gather them, Miss Miller saw her dash her hand across her eyes.

"Is anything wrong? Are you in trouble?" questioned Zoe, quickly, for her heart was kind.

"Oh, that's all right," responded "Madame" Adele, with evident embarrassment, as she made another quick dab at her eyes, "I didn't think I'd be so silly. I'll tell you a good fortune, miss," she added, with a painful desire to please.

"I'd rather you would tell me what it is that bothers you," persisted Zoe.

"It's my husband," simply. "He's sick, and when I came away his pain was awful. I hated to leave him alone in the boarding house, and just now it seemed as though I couldn't stand it, not knowing how he was. That's all, miss."

Zoe pulled out her purse. It was not a very heavy one.

"Madame Adele," she commanded, "take that money and hire a taxicab—there are a dozen waiting outside—and go to see your husband as fast as the law allows. I'll take your place here."

The fortune teller gasped. "Do you mean it?" she breathed, her face alight. "But how can you do it?"

"Give me your robe and hood," explained Zoe. "In this dim light no one will know me, they would never think of my being here anyway. Hurry before somebody comes!"

Without another protest, Madame Adele tore off the black mantle that enveloped her, fastened it around her companion and adjusted the disguising hood. Silently she produced a black pencil and with a few deft touches transformed Zoe's young face into a deeply-lined, middle-aged one. Then an idea seemed to strike her.

"But the fortunes, miss? How can you tell them?"

"I know nearly everybody here, I'll please them well. Begone!" ordered Zoe, briskly, and the palmist disappeared through a flap in the tent.

The juggler had finished his act and trade began again. Zoe mapped out rosy futures for two girl friends, a rather silly old bachelor, and an imposing dowager. Then there was a brief lull.

Presently another customer appeared and at the sight of his tall figure against the shadows of the softly lighted tent Zoe's heart gave a painful leap.

"Will you tell my fortune, Madame Adele?" How familiar was the pleasant voice!

"Your hand, monsieur," as professionally as possible. "Your life is all in the lines, so plain for one to read. Ah, it has been a pleasant life so far, has it not? I see the school boy, full of mischief, but quick to learn; then the larger boy at larger school, a college perhaps? But yes. Then comes a sorrow, a parent has been lost. Then the travel lines. You have been in the East, monsieur."

"You are clever, Madame Adele! You make me believe in your powers. You are a French woman?"

"Do you doubt it, monsieur? Do you not know the French gypsies? I was born—but to return. Again you are at home, in a large house, with a fond mother. You are gay, you have many friends. Also you work, but not with the hands. You are, how calls one, a breaker?"

"A broker?" laughed young Donaldson.

"Ah, the so funny English!" She joined in his mirth.

"You read marvelously," he encouraged her. "So much for the past and the present. What comes next?"

"Marriage, monsieur. You must be fiance, is it not so?"

"Perhaps. Can you describe the lady of my fate?"

The fortune teller hesitated the briefest moment, then she went bravely on.

"But yes, monsieur, I can see a lady. You have known her since childhood, your families are indeed friends. She is well born, well bred, and brings to you a dot. A suitable match, say your friends—a fine couple! She is tall and fair—"

She stopped, abruptly, searching his face. His bright amused expression had faded to a look half troubled, half bored.

"What is it?" she cried. "You mean—you do not care—for her?"

Donaldson leaned forward, earnestly. "You are the repository of all our secrets, Madame Adele. I know the lady, she is all that you say but—"

"But what?" she demanded, breathlessly.

He laughed with a bit of embarrassment, but answered frankly, "I had hoped to care more deeply, more romantically, for my lady of dreams. Is there no one else?"

The fortune teller hesitated, studying his face.

"But, monsieur, you have been much seen with this young lady. Perhaps you do not quite realize how devoted you have appeared. Your marriage is looked for. Society expects it, your mother expects it. It is thought the—proper thing."

There was a moment of silence, then the man rose. All the youthfulness seemed suddenly to have faded out of his face.

"The proper thing!" he repeated, slowly. "I see. The proper way is the prudent way, not the old sweet natural way! One might expect a little romance at a fortune teller's," he smiled wearily, "but the proper thing has taken its place!"

He pulled a bank note from his pocket and turned away.

Zoe rose with a little gasp, as if she wanted air. A sweet, wild hope, long pressed resolutely down in her heart, sprang suddenly into life at his outburst. Unexpectedly, she heard her own voice call.

"Return, monsieur!"

He wheeled in surprise.

"There may be something more I have not yet tried the crystal ball."

She motioned him back back to his chair and pulled forward a small glass ball which was part of the paraphernalia of the tent. She fixed her eyes steadily upon it.

"Figures form," she announced, a second later. "I see another woman in your life. She is young, she is small, she is dark."

Donaldson bent toward her, eagerly. "Do you really see her, too? A little gypsy of a girl?"

"Yes yes, I see her. She wears red like a poppy, she has poppies in her hair. She has no dot, but she would try—to make you—a good wife, monsieur."

He sprang up, excitedly.

"Hang the money! I expect to support my own wife! She is a marvel, I tell you, would she really have me, do you think?"

"If I were you," suggested the palmist, but without raising her eyes, "I would try to find that out!"

"You are truly wonderful, Madame Adele!" Young Donaldson gave a happy laugh as he turned to go. "You have read me a charming fortune. I shall recommend you with pleasure. Good night."

A whisper from behind made Zoe turn.

"I'm back, miss. Dan was sleeping like a child, and the man from across the hall was sitting with him. Aren't people kind! I'll never forget it of you, miss, never!"

She quickly divested Zoe of her disguise and rubbed her face back to its natural lines.

"Now let me tell your fortune, miss," she begged. "It's all that I can do."

But Zoe shook her head, laughing happily. "Not tonight, Madame Adele," she cried, "I've just had it told!"

Old Landmark to Go.

Built in 1752, and handed down from father to son through four generations, and now doomed for destruction, is the Old Absinthe house, one of the most unique landmarks of the south, known to tourists from all quarters of the world who have visited New Orleans. The edict of the United States government in shutting off the importation of absinthe sounds the knell of this quaint remnant of Bohemian life in the Crescent City. It is situated in the darkest, dirtiest, noisiest section of the Latin quarter, and despite its age remains in a good state of preservation. Its beginning is said to mark the opening of the first saloon in New Orleans. In past years it has housed many notables from the old world, and almost every celebrated man and woman who has visited New Orleans has made at least a brief stop at this secluded cafe to enjoy the sight of its interesting habitues and to listen to the medley of foreign tongues, wagging cheerily under the influence of absinthe frappe and other kindred drinks created from the seductive fluid. In Mardi Gras festivals the bizarre cafe becomes the rendezvous for the younger set intent on a frolic.

SINGS PRAISES OF POVERTY

Writer Points Out Why in Many Ways It Should Be Preferred to Affluence.

Any man may brutally pay his way anywhere, but it is quite another thing to be accepted by your human kind not as a paid lodger, but as a friend. Always, it seems to me, I have wanted to submit myself, and indeed submit the stranger, to that test. Moreover, how can any man look for true adventure in life if he always knows to a certainty where his next meal is coming from? In a world so completely dominated by goods, by things, by possessions, and smothered by security, what fine adventure is left to a man of spirit save the adventure of poverty?

I do not mean by this the adventure of involuntary poverty, for I maintain that involuntary poverty, like involuntary riches, is a credit to no man. It is only as we dominate life that we really live. What I mean here, if I may so express it, is an adventure in achieved poverty. In the lives of such true men as Francis of Assisi and Tolstoy that which draws the world to them in secret sympathy is not that they lived lives of poverty, but rather, having riches at their hands, or for the very asking, that they chose poverty as the better way of life.—David Grayson in the American Magazine.

EVEN A SNAIL HAS FRIENDS

French Society Has Been Formed to Prevent Him From Being "Adulterated."

A society has been formed in France called the "Friends of the Snail."

The society does not concern itself with the treatment or maltreatment of the living snail. Millions of sails may be put to a lingering death in the salt can without disturbing the minds of the members. Their friendship exists only for that aristocrat of snails, the Vigneron de Bourgogne. Especially fed on vine leaves, he grows to noble proportions, develops a notable flavor and is therefore accorded a proud position upon the gourmet's table.

The Friends of the Snail are concerned with the posthumous reputation of this king among snails. It seems that ragpickers collect his empty shells by the thousand and sell them to nefarious dealers, who wash them with potash and then refill them with a compound of calves' liver pounded up with a little brown earth and other ingredients, flavored with saffron, parsley and various seasoning herbs. The spurious snail is then sold as the true Vigneron de Bourgogne, whose price is from 20 cents to 30 cents a dozen. The inferior quality of snail, but still a real snail, fetches only from 8 to 10 cents a dozen.

The Friends of the Snail will now see to it that no shell and herb disguised liver shall in future bring discredit upon the Vigneron de Bourgogne.

MAY BE CONTEMPT OF COURT

Some Definitions by a Writer Who Does Not Respect Our Judicial System.

A judge is an officer appointed to mislead, restrain, hypnotize, cajole, seduce, flabbergast and bamboozle a jury in such manner that it will forget all the facts and give its decision to the best lawyer. The objection to judges is that they are seldom capable of a sound professional judgment of lawyers. The objection to lawyers is that the best are the worst.

In some states the jury is judge of the law as well as of the facts. The objection to this system is that the jury invariably decides that the law is an ass. Hence the courts of appeal.

A jury is a group of twelve men who, having lied to the judge about their hearing, health and business engagements, have failed to fool him. Even a judge, it appears, sometimes has a certain low cunning.

The penalty for laughing in a courtroom is thirty days in jail. If it were not for this penalty the remarks of judges would never be heard.

A defendant is a man who has sought refuge in the courts from the natural consequences of his rascality.

A fine is a bribe paid by a rich man to escape the penalty laid upon poor men. In China and Persia a judge takes bribes personally. In Christendom he takes them as agent for the public treasury. But it makes no difference to the man who pays them—or can't pay them.

The verdict of a jury is the opinion of that juror who smokes the worst cigars.—Baltimore Evening Sun.

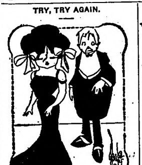
TRY, TRY AGAIN.



She—And why are you afraid to ask papa?

He—Well, I've asked him for three of your sisters already.

Why He Wept.

At a reception one night, says the Woman's Home Companion, a loud-voiced young man was invited to sing. Desultory applause followed, and he responded with a vociferous rendering of "My Old Kentucky Home." The hostess was passing among her guests, beaming at the success of her entertainment and sure that everybody was having a good time, when suddenly, to her surprise, she came upon a middle-aged man but slightly known to her, who was weeping silently, but bitterly in a secluded corner. Thinking that his heart had been touched by the old song, she asked sympathetically:

"Why do you weep? Are you a Kentuckian?"

"No, madam," he replied. "I am a musician."

Frontier Medical List.

In good old frontier days castor oil was the principal medical beverage—good full measure, too. Only the biggest person could hold a whole dose—one-half a dipperful, with half a dipperful of New Orleans molasses added to help slick it down and make it taste good, only it didn't taste good. In those historic days every old woman was a doctor and gathered her own "yarbs" in the woods, and knew how to mix up medical messes that would stir the vitals of a brass monkey or a cast iron pig. All backwoodsmen believed in "yarb" doctors. Something in "yarbs," at that.

Worth Three Times a Diamond.

Nearly all the emeralds mined today come from Colombia. And, in spite of the supposed higher value of diamonds, the emerald is the most precious of gems. Carat for carat, a flawless emerald would bring perhaps three times the price of a flawless diamond in the jewelry market. India, the storehouse of precious stones, is credited with producing the first emeralds, but the Oriental emerald is not identical with the modern gem, as it is a variety of the ruby, of green color and extremely rare.

A FRIEND'S ADVICE
Something Worth Listening To.

A young Nebr. man was advised by a friend to eat Grape-Nuts because he was all run down from a spell of fever. He tells the story:

"Last spring I had an attack of fever that left me in a very weak condition. I had to quit work; had no appetite, was nervous and discouraged.

"A friend advised me to eat Grape-Nuts, but I paid no attention to him and kept getting worse as time went by.

"I took many kinds of medicine but none of them seemed to help me. My system was completely run down, my blood got out of order from want of proper food, and several very large boils broke out on my neck. I was so weak I could hardly walk.

"One day mother ordered some Grape-Nuts and induced me to eat some. I felt better and that night rested fine. As I continued to use the food every day, I grew stronger steadily and now have regained my former good health. I would not be without Grape-Nuts, as I believe it is the most health-giving food in the world." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Suicide Among German Children.

Why do so many German children commit suicide? No one seems to know, but there is no dispute about the fact. Indeed it has been said that the majority of suicides are those of children, and experts seem inclined to connect the grisly epidemic with the educational system. That "the weak must go to the wall" has become an axiom that has been extended to the schools, and the undeveloped mind of the child seeks relief in suicide from the discouragement of failure. It would be interesting to know if any of the so-called heathen countries of the world have ever experienced such a horrid social phenomena as that of child suicide.

Education and Larger Life.

It seems to me that the woman who cannot cut out a garment better because of her geometry and her drawing lessons, who cannot speak English more distinctly and with fuller vocabulary because of her study of French or German, who cannot find a hundred uses for her chemistry in the little everyday emergencies of her housekeeping, has not succeeded in getting from her studies all that they had to give her.—Home Progress Magazine.

FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

FOR SCIATIC RHEUMATISM

Try the Treatment That Cured This Pronounced Case in Minneapolis After Other Treatments Failed.

Sciatica is neuralgia of the sciatic nerve. Its origin is generally rheumatic and is the direct result of taking cold. For this reason the disease is commonly known as "sciatic rheumatism." That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure this disease is shown by numerous cases like that of Mrs. J. B. Hansen, of No. 221 Twentieth Ave., So., Minneapolis, Minn. She says:

"A few years ago following an attack of the grip I was taken with sciatica. For six years I suffered untold agony and thought it would be a blessing to me if I could only die. There were sharp, shooting pains in both of my limbs and my shoulders and arms were affected also but not so severely. If I moved about quickly, the pain would catch me so that I had to scream. My limbs were swollen until I could hardly walk. I also had a terrible dull pain in my back which was often unbearable. Each attack continued to last for a week or two at a time. While suffering from the sciatica I was further run-down by weakness common to women of my age.

"I received so little relief from the doctor's medicine that I became discouraged and quit it. My husband urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as he had read how they had cured cases like mine. I felt better after I had taken the pills a short time but took several boxes until I was certain I was cured. I give this statement of my cure thinking that other sufferers may be helped as I was through using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

The tonic treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills succeeds where other treatments fail because it is based on the sound medical principle that the health of the nerves depends on pure, red blood.

Every person who is interested in the home treatment of nervous disorders should send for a new edition of our booklet entitled, "Diseases of the Nervous System, Their Nature, Symptoms and Treatment." Address the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are for sale at all druggists, or will be mailed to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. Adv.

ROAD and FARM IMPROVEMENT

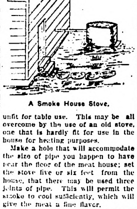
MAKING SMOKE HOUSE SAFE

Danger of Burning Building Eliminated by Use of Old Stove Connected by Pipe Outside.

(By J. G. WOODWORTH.)

It is often the case when building a fire in the smoke house that the fire will burn up too high and catch the meat, sometimes the flames catching the house, and as a consequence buildings may be destroyed.

Oftentimes the heat is such that the meat is partially cooked or heated to such an extent that it sweats and soon loses its flavor, becoming strong and unfit for table use. This may be all overcome by the use of an old stove, one that is hardly fit for use in the house for heating purposes.



A Smoke House Stove.

Make a hole that will accommodate the size of pipe you happen to have near the floor of the meat house; set the stove five or six feet from the house, that there may be used three joints of pipe. This will permit the smoke to cool sufficiently, which will give the meat a fine flavor.

It would be better to spend two or three dollars for a stove than to run a great risk in building a fire in the smoke house.

WHERE GOOD ROADS BENEFIT

Case Cited Where It Cost Farmer Much Time and Money to Deliver Small Load of Apples.

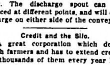
Recently my man went to the county seat to deliver 25 bushels of apples. The mud was so deep that the team was repeatedly stopped to wind on level stretches and on many hills a brake was not necessary, writes D. H. Watts in the New England Homestead. The time required to make the round trip of 32 miles was 13 hours, not counting the time used feeding the team and in unloading. Much less time and scarcely any wear and tear of team, wagon and harness would have delivered 75 bushels on a macadam or a brick road bed.

If man and team are worth $1 a day, and they are, then we lost $8 earning capacity that day and worked very hard 13 hours (more than a day and a half, by eight-hour day system) to earn a day's wages. The gigantic question is not, do good roads cost too much, but how much more do bad roads cost us? Let every farmer be a committee of one to figure on road profits and losses. The postoffice department and many others might well participate. The consumer of farm products is a sufferer also, as because of these ill-kept roads his supply comes inadequately at times, and again so as to demoralize the market. It is true that difficult transportation invariably means higher prices at the consumer's door.

FILLING GRANARY NOW EASY

Farmers Save Much Valuable Time by Using Portable Elevators in Storing Their Crops.

Farmers nowadays are too busy and their time is too valuable to load corn into the granary by shovels. This work is now done by portable elevators with conveyors for delivering grain into the farthermost corner of barn, crib or granary, and distributing ear corn or small grain at various places in the length of the building. The discharge spout can be placed at different points, and will discharge on either side of the conveyor.



Filling the Granary.

Credit and the Silo.

A great corporation which deals with farmers and has to extend credit to thousands of them every year has one rather interesting rule by which to rate a man: A farmer who has a silo is considered a good risk. His standing with the company is higher than that of the man without a silo. It is easier for him to get credit than it is for the man who has no silo. This is because credit is not wholly based on what a man has but partly on what he is. His enterprise, industry, capability and honesty are considered as well as the value and nature of his property. The presence of a silo on a man's farm is evidence that he has most of the qualities that form a basis for credit, and for that reason he is considered by this corporation a safe man to trust.

Handling Cabbage.

Cabbage which is to be stored should be handled with care. When thrown from the field into the wagon-box the heads are severely bruised, and this is likely to cause decay after storage. Some of the most careful growers use crates, baskets or tubs in which the heads are carefully placed in the field and these are hauled to the storage house, where they are emptied quickly and with ease. Too much care cannot be exercised in the harvesting of all crops which are intended for storage.

NARROW ROADS ARE FAVORED

Agitation to Cut Width to Thirty Feet Has Been Taken Up in Kansas—Easier to Care For.

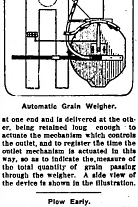
The agitation which was begun in Iowa two years ago to cut down the width of country roads, allowing the unused strips of land along each side of the highway to revert to the adjacent property owner, has now been taken up in Kansas, where the state highway engineer is advocating a plan similar to that advocated in Iowa by Governor Carroll, says the Iowa Homestead. The argument both in Iowa and in Kansas is that by narrowing the highways to thirty feet, and maintaining the entire width as a highway and drainage system, the wall of weeds upon each side of the roadway would be dispensed with and a great waste of land would be minimized. The Kansas highway engineer has figured that a sixty-foot roadway takes 14.55 acres from two sides of each section of land, or twenty-nine acres from each section if there is a road on all four sides. By abandoning thirty feet of each road that is now sixty feet wide, three and two-thirds acres would revert to the owner of each quarter section, thus materially adding to the farm income. The situation in Kansas is considerably akin to that in Iowa, only a portion (from one-third to one-half) of the land allotted to a highway being used as an actual roadway. Those who are back of the movement in both of the states believe that better results will be obtained by narrowing the road and keeping the narrower channel in better repair, while at the same time adding thousands of acres of rich farm land to the state's aggregate. Whether the agitation bears fruit or not it can hardly fail to be of value in furthering the cause of good roads by increasing public interest in the subject.

DEVICE FOR WEIGHING GRAIN

Arranged to Work Automatically, Registering Total Weight of Grain Passing Through.

The Scientific American in describing an automatic grain weigher, the invention of E. L. Adams of Edgar, Neb., says:

This device is operated automatically by the weight of grain it receives. It comprises a hollow vessel with an inlet at one end and an outlet at the other, and comprising means by which grain can enter the vessel until its limit of capacity is reached. Means also provide for the automatic discharge of the grain, and it passes continuously into the receiving vessel at one end and is delivered at the other, being retained long enough to actuate the mechanism which controls the outlet, and to register the time the outlet mechanism is actuated in this way, so as to indicate the measure of the total quantity of grain passing through the weigher. A side view of the device is shown in the illustration.



Automatic Grain Weigher.

Plow Early.

Plow the land as early as possible. To make it still better, disk the land two or three weeks before plowing. This disking makes a better seedbed, as the stubble is mixed with the soil. The disking also buries weed seed and grain, which makes them germinate and the plowing kills them. Early fall plowing will, as a rule, make a better crop than spring plowing and especially so if the land was disked first. Then again, there is too little time in the spring to do the plowing then.

How Europe Saves Fertility.

The fertility of European soil is maintained by maintaining the supply of active plant food and of organic matter. A part of the nitrogen is secured from the air, a part from the purchased feeding stuffs and some from the nitrogenous fertilizers. The losses of potash and phosphoric acid in the crop are counterbalanced by purchases in feeds and fertilizers. Every care is taken to prevent loss of plant food. Leaves, stalks, etc., are either saved and fed or are used as bedding.

Good Roads & Farm Notes

Early plowing makes bigger crops.

By the day, did you ever hear of a road drag?

A good time now to patch up around the farm buildings.

If possible, put the celery away in slightly moist, clean sand.

The toolhouse has become one of the important adjuncts to the modern farm.

Only in rare cases do cutworms bother crops that are planted on fall plowed land.

Alfalfa under congenial surroundings or conditions is a business crop and no loafer.

A coat of manure put on the garden this fall will give a good account of itself next June.

Hot bed sashes are usually three by six feet in dimensions, but smaller sizes may be used.

Seed corn is an expensive luxury if placed where the birds, poultry, mice and rats can get it.

It is quite common to sow buckwheat, especially on poor land, as a green manure crop.

Gardens infested with cut worms may be helped by keeping the land free from vegetation all fall and burning all trash.

PURELY FEMININE

NOVELTY IS DEMANDED

MOST STRIKING FEATURE OF DRESS TRIMMING SITUATION.

Every Conceivable Thing That Will Give an Air of "Difference" Is Employed—Most Unusual Effects Noted in Consequence.

The keynote of the dress trimming situation for the coming season is certainly novelty. Nothing is too "different" and unusual not to be in demand, and the more curious the trimming the greater seems to be its popularity.

Fringes are favored by the fashion makers in Paris and Berlin. Silk ball fringes in every conceivable style, size and combination of color will be used on the more dressy costumes. Virtually all kinds of bead fringes are in demand, from the simplest to the most elaborate in the medium and narrow widths. Silk fringe will be seen on the gowns of plainer cut.

Opalescent bead fringes, jet, black and white and all the shades of amber are great favorites, with gold and silver for use on elaborate evening costumes and some of the handsome wraps for evening wear.

Colored embroidered bands are meeting with high favor. These come in all widths and a wide variety of designs, many of them showing metallic threads intermingled with the floss silk. Solid metal effects are largely used. Gold, silver, copper and gunmetal embroidered sets at intervals with mock jewels are wonderful in their beauty, especially those of oriental design and rich coloring.

Jets in band embroideries and fringes are well liked for trimmings on black and white gowns; dull jets are seen on mourning costumes. Very effective are the cut jet costumes with rhinestone centers and crystal buttons of all the conceivable colors set with colored jewels and rhinestones.

Some of the most unusual effects are seen in the chiffon floral trimmings. These are in the form of bands of small or large blossoms, leaves and buds, that can be transferred to the gown simply by catching them lightly from underneath with rather loose stitchery. They can be had in wreaths, garlands, clusters and in single blossoms, and there is certainly no question as to their beauty and adaptability in the trimming of elaborate costumes for evening and formal occasions in the afternoon.

Tunics are in great demand. Odd and fancy styles are especially well liked. Prominent among these are those that are cut away in front, showing the influence of the directoire period now dominant in garments of all descriptions. Other styles are draped in pannier effect or else slashed at the side, forming long panels in the front and the back. Very handsome models are they that show demi-flouncings, which vogue comes in directly from Paris.

Braids there are in such numbers and varieties that it would be impossible to describe them in a limited space. But all are beautiful in design and texture, and if you desire a trimming for a simple morning frock choose braid.

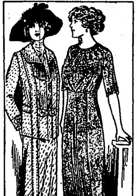
Tweed Costume.—Green tweed flecked with brown is used for our model. The coat is sacque shaped, trimmed with straps to match skirt. It has a collar of material, below which in front plaited lace frills hang. Straps trim the sleeves.

Hat of black velvet, trimmed with a velvet ribbon mount.

Materials required: Five yards of tweed 46 inches wide, five buttons, 4 1-2 yards silk or satin for lining coat.



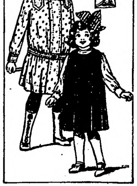
Simple Home Dress.—So simple is this, that it might be made in many different materials.

The skirt has a wrapped seam up the left side of front, six buttons trim the foot. The waist is high and plainly set to the bodice, which is Magyar, and has a low, round neck, braided simply as trimming. The sleeves are trimmed to match.

Materials required: Three and one-half yards 42 inches wide, one-half dozen buttons, one-half dozen yards braid.

DESIGNED FOR SMALL GIRL

Dress for Girl of Ten to Twelve Years—This little dress is in pale blue zephyr spotted with navy; it is cut Magyar and has a box pleat taken down front and nearly to foot. Plain navy zephyr is used for the yoke, waistband and cuffs; this gives a smart effect to the little dress.



Materials required: 2½ yards spotted zephyr 30 inches wide, 1½ yard plain.

Pinafore for Girl of Six to Eight Years—For this, navy blue sateen with sprigs of white on it is used; it is quite plain and has the shoulders of fronts rounded and laid on those of the back, where a button keeps them in place; one button and corresponding hole form fastening at the back.

Materials required: 2 yards 28 inches wide, 3 buttons.

Borders to Continue Vogue.

According to the Dry Goods Economist, borders will continue their popularity throughout the spring and summer of next year. This now favorite form of ornamentation will include borders made of agaric yarns, jacquards in variety, fine embroideries. Carrick-macross lace, open work lattice designs, printed warps on satin, velours, etc. Some attention will be given to tissues and mulls for lingerie dresses. These will be ornamented with boucle and agaric yarns and in some instances will be embroidered in pompadour colors, applied to white grounds principally. Linens and like linens share in the movement of heavy materials.

Silk Blouses.

Many of the new blouses are made of silk and have linen collars and cuffs. A pretty blouse is made surplice fashion with a sailor collar and undercuffs of dainty hand embroidered linen, which may be removed and laundered.

NAILS MUST BE WELL KEPT

No Amount of Care That Can Be Expended on Them Should Be Considered Misplaced.

Begin the daily manicuring by filing the nails to a pretty oval; then soak them in soft rain water mixed with glycerin and rosewater. If any ragged edges appear at the corners of the softened nails they should be trimmed off with the scissors and the orange-stick should be applied to push the skin away from the nail. At this point the nails may be most readily cleansed with a soft brush dipped in soap and tepid water.

Never clean nails with a sharp instrument, for that scratches both flesh and nail, making both retain dust and look coarse and ugly. Dirt may be worked from under nails roughened by a sharp instrument through the use of vaseline under the nail, or by dipping the point of the orange wood stick in lemon juice and gently rubbing away any obstinate stain. Stains at the corners of the nails, too, may be removed in this way after soaking the finger-tips in warm, soapy water.

Last of all, the nails are polished by rubbing pink manicure salve over them and polishing it off by means of a chamois-skin buffer and some manicure powder. A dull polish, not the effect of a brilliant enamel, is considered refined.

Well-kept finger nails presuppose refinement, and no matter what sort of hands women are blessed or cursed with, polite society demands that their finger nails shall be pink, almond shaped and in perfect condition. The shape may not be good to begin with, but a vast amount of improvement will come with careful treatment.

Too Slow.

"You started in a few weeks ago to read 'The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire,' didn't you? How are you getting on with it?"

"Oh, I quit almost at the start. It kept me so busy lookin' at the footnotes that I couldn't keep track of the story. The author was too slow about bringin' in the hero and heroine, anyhow."

Turkish Counting of Time.

Through the center of the mosque of St. Sophia runs the theoretical meridian which gave the Turks true local time—one hour and fifty-six minutes fifty-two seconds fast on Greenwich—until, two years ago, the new government fell in with the standard system of time zones, and came into the eastern European zone, exactly two hours ahead of Greenwich time. For religious purposes, however, 12 o'clock always happens at sunset, and noon thus wanders with the seasons all round the clock.—Westminster Gazette.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

New Herd of Bison of Interest to Scientists

WASHINGTON.—Government scientists in Washington displayed great interest in a dispatch from Winnipeg a few days ago, announcing that Harry V. Radford, the American explorer, had discovered more than 250 wild buffalo in the Slave lake district of the Hudson Bay country.

The wild buffalo of the American plains are gone and nothing remains of them save a few museum and zoological park specimens.

Outside of the national zoological park in Washington, the Bronx Zoo, in New York, Yellowstone National park, and a few other collections of domesticated bison there are no known living specimens of the buffalo in this country, and the last wild herd in the United States is believed to have been exterminated. For many years reports have come out of the Hudson Bay country concerning the existence of a new and distinct species of buffalo, but only within the last ten years have scientists agreed that this species is a different variety from the American bison.

"We are very much interested in Mr. Radford's discovery," said Dr. Richard Rathbun, assistant secretary of the Smithsonian institution, in charge of the United States national museum. "We know this explorer very well. The object of his expedition was to visit the home of the wood bison in the almost unknown region of northwestern Canada, west of the Slave river, and north of the lower Peace river. This expedition started in 1909 and has included track surveys over many hundreds of miles, and furnished Mr. Radford the opportunity of closely studying the wood bison in its haunts, and of making the first recorded observations on this rare animal in life.

"Eighteen specimens were seen by him during the first part of his exploration tour, and under a permit from the Canadian government one was killed by him. It weighed 2,402 pounds, and both the skin and skeleton were preserved. The skin was presented by Mr. Radford to the Provincial museum at Edmonton, Alberta, while the skeleton was obtained by the National museum at Washington.

"This skeleton and the skull are very fine specimens, and the skeleton is probably the only one of a wild buffalo in any museum. Our information was that Mr. Radford had not returned, and that his expedition continued into the Slave lake country and beyond. This is the first word we have received from him since this specimen was obtained."

Officials Assert That Many Wives Are Indolent

A SHARP arraignment of the farmers' wives and daughters of the country and incidentally their city sisters is contained in a report made the other day by George K. Holmes, chief of the division of production and distribution of the agricultural department. Although wages have risen steadily during forty-four years. Mr Holmes declares that the women of the present age have forgotten or are too proud to indulge in household work on the farm. The lure of "society," which has reached out to the farm, he says, is much to blame for the conditions, which he described as "acute."

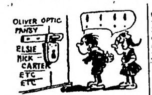
"Country girls, as well as city girls," says Mr. Holmes, in reporting to Secretary Wilson, "seem to regard household labor for hire as undesirable. Joined with this fact is the other one that the women of the farmer's family are neither able nor willing to repeat the manual labor performances of their grandmothers on the farm."

The raising of the standard of living on the farm, the report continues, is responsible in a measure for the women of the farm now engaging in "social functions" which the government expert holds to be "incompatible with the performance of household labor." The passing of the old-time domestic industries is deplored, and Mr. Holmes adds that "it is rare that one of the younger women know how to knit."

"Throughout large areas," he says, "the pride of the housewife in great stores of preserves, dried and pickled fruits, berries and vegetables exists chiefly in history, and dependence is placed mostly upon the local store for the products of the cannery and the evaporator."

Within the period mentioned Mr. Holmes reports that wages paid to men laborers on the farm have arisen as high as 72 per cent and that harvest hands are now paid upward of $20 a month with board. For the farm laborer who lives on the farm the year around, Mr. Holmes declares the money paid does not represent the real value of his remuneration, for the "cost of living" virtually is solved for him.

Oliver Optic Is Barred in Washington Library



OLIVER OPTIC, Horatio Alger, Mrs. Alden ("Pansy"), and a score or more of the lesser lights of the juvenile literature of a generation ago will suffer a permanent eclipse in the public library of the District of Columbia. The executive committee of the library is co-operating with the teachers to discourage indiscriminate reading of juvenile stories by the youth of Washington.

In the opinion of George F. Bowerman, librarian, books that tend to institute false ideas in the minds of the growing youth, those which force an introspective trend in little girls and those which falsely depict actual conditions of history must be set aside.

Oliver Optic's works are classed as "purposeless."

Horatio Alger's juvenile heroes have too ready a road to success. Of Alger's works the committee said: "G. A. Henty, while not writing any better class of literature than does Alger, stands just across the border line which divides the good from the bad. The mediocre writings of Henty based on historical truths inspire the boys to read better literature. Alger spoils the capacity for better reading."

The "Elsie" books, dear to the hearts of every schoolgirl of the '70s and '80s and heretofore regarded as harmless because so highly moral, are roundly condemned as tending to make a girl introspective and "goody-goody." The same charge with less vehemence of utterance is laid at the door of the "Pancy" series.

"Only a shade worse than Old Sleuth and Nick Carter," is the view of the library committee with regard to a list including the revolutionary series by George Warren; the college sports series, by Lester Chadwick; the Jack Ranger series, by Clarence Young; the Boy Hunter series, by Capt. Ralph Bonehill; the Motor Girl series and the Dorothy Dale series, by Margaret Penrose.

When a Herring Is a Herring It Is a Herring

WHAT IS A HERRING ?
A HERRING IS A HERRING WHEN A HERRING

ACCORDING to Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh a herring is a herring when a herring.

The secretary of the treasury, who returned to his office the other day, was called upon to render a decision on what is a herring, and he did it accordingly to the foregoing paragraph. He decided also that a herring is not any one of a number of fancy fishes popularly classed as herring, as many of the importers would like to have the customs officials believe that they are herring.

Like the question, "What is whiskey" and "is a hen a bird," "What is a herring" has caused considerable trouble to custom officials. Assistant Secretary Curtis wrestled with the herring, that is the herring question, and then passed it on to Secretary MacVeagh and the latter (he having been a wholesale grocer for many years and an importer of herring) promptly held that a herring is a herring, and that anchovies, brisling, cardines, sprats, pilchards and alewives are impostors and hereafter shall not be herrings.

To the importer this means that herrings when imported will be assessed 1 cent a pound if fresh, and half a cent a pound if packed any other way, and that the importers shall pay a duty of three-fourths of a cent a pound, or 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The Meanness of Him.

"Old Crusty is the limit."

"What's he done now?"

"At the party last night Miss Anshunt, who is always fishing for a compliment, rushed up to him, with: 'Oh, Mr. Crusty, Mr. Smith has just told me that I have a beautiful voice!'

"'Did no one ever tell you that you have a beautiful face?' asked Crusty, smiling down at her.

"'Oh-o no!' replied she, trying to snuggle beneath his arm.'

"'I thought not,' replied Crusty, breaking away."

Subtle Flattery.

"Blobeley is a crafty fellow."

"Why do you think so?"

"He was telling me yesterday about his winter sleeping arrangements. During cold weather he and Mrs. Blobeley turn off the steam in their bed-chamber and open a window before retiring."

"Just so."

"The next morning when they wake Blobeley tells his wife she is the dearest woman in the world. After that he pretends to doze. Then she slips out of bed, pulls down the window and turns on the steam."

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Winona.—The November term of United States court closed late Saturday.

Minneapolis.—Dr. Samuel H. Van Cleve, a resident of Minnesota for the past 56 years, died in St. Mary's hospital following a prolonged illness.

Caledonia.—O. E. Burtness, who is serving his sixteenth year as county treasurer, won over M. C. Driscoll (dem.) by a majority of 1,500 votes.

Pipestone. — Fire destroyed the buildings on the farm of August Wadtke, across the line in Lincoln county. The loss amounted to $5,000.

Little Falls.—Chester Dalton, held here on a charge of attempted murder, is thought to have a hand in several holdups on the Northern Pacific west of here.

Duluth, Minn.—The Duluth city council has appropriated $15,000 for the purpose of testing the validity of the franchise under which the Duluth street railway is operating.

St. Cloud.—Delegates from the Catholic societies of this section of the state will meet in this city this week to discuss the advisability of organizing a district association of Catholic societies.

Clinton.—The clergy of Big Stone district of the Minnesota conference of the Swedish Lutheran church terminated their two-days' session here last week. The ladies of the church served free dinner to all while in session.

Fergus Falls, Minn.—By far one of the most daring robberies ever perpetrated in western Minnesota occurred at Bluffton, a village in the eastern part of this county, Tuesday night. Although the citizens were aware of their presence, the burglars coolly went on with their work and escaped with loot valued at $150.

St. Cloud.—After riding for nearly two weeks on the rods of freight and passenger trains, and escaping from conflicts with railroad brakemen of five divisions without a scratch, Carl Hendricks and Harold Mason, Milwaukee society men, who have been making a trip from Seattle to their home town without paying a cent, were chased across a ten-acre field and just before they reached a refuge were injured by an angry bull.

Sauk Center. — A hot county seat fight in Stearns county has begun. St. Cloud has been the county seat since the organization of the county in the early days of the state. Now comes Albany, with an offer of a fine site and a $50,000 bonus for the removal of the county buildings to that town. Sauk Center's commercial club has sent a committee of five businessmen to Albany to co-operate with the citizens of that town.

Minneapolis.—An extremely notable tribute to the bravery of Indian fighters of Minneapolis was given when pioneers of the state, veterans of the Civil War, and members of the Center Improvement officials and members of the Center Improvement association gathered in the Nicollet hotel to pay homage to the men in Captain Richard Strout's command, who assisted in quelling the Sioux outbreak of 1862. The banquet marked the fiftieth anniversary of the outbreak. It was given under the auspises of the Center Improvement association.

Minneapolis. — City health department officials and employees recently had two conferences in regard to the report on the health survey of Minneapolis recently made by the New York experts for the Civic and Commerce association. Sanitary inspectors gatherd in one room, but merely heard the report read and did not talk of how betterments suggested might be accomplished. In an adjoining room the milk inspection officials conferred with the state dairy officials to bring about closer co-operation in the work.

Minneapolis.—The band burst into "Home, Sweet Home," the great hall shook as many joined their voices in the grand old song, the people cheered until the rafters rang, and then they turned and made their way out through the doors, and lights went out and silence reigned and the 1912 land show, the most successful ever carried out, with 107,200 recorded admissions and 82,000 actual sales of individual tickets at the gates, had passed into history. The people left the hall with lingering looks and bulging pockets.

St. Paul.—Conditions at the State Hospital for Consumptives at Walker were called scandalous by Dr. Longstreet Taylor of St. Paul, a member of the Minnesota Tubercular commission, who spoke before the Conservation congress in the Minneapolis armory on "A State Equipped to Fight Tuberculosis." The idea of one or several state hospitals for consumptives was held wrong by the St. Paul physician, who urged instead, a tuberculosis hospital superintended by a competent physician in each county of the state.

Baudette.—After discovering that she had accidentally put deadly poison in a medicine she had compounded for August Kahler, her son, who was leaving for the wilds of northern Minnesota, Mrs. August Kahler of Stillwater, Minn., started an alarm which followed her son through Baudette, out on a lake and finally found him through aid of a horseman at a settler's home.

The medicine which she had compounded for him was intended to ward off colds. It contained enough poison to have killed him upon taking the first dose.

Minneapolis. — While the 1912 land products show attendance Wednesday fell 430 behind the high record mark at 10,021 set by Minnesota day, it brought the total admission for eight days to 1,530 more than for the corresponding days of the St. Paul land show last year. The feature of Wednesday night was the chorus singing of the United Scandinavian Singing societies. After the concert for the Conservation congress at the Armory was over the singers came to the land show, occupied the band stand, and gave several selections, closing with "America."

LEADING POCKET BILLIARD PLAYER OF EAST

Frank Sherman, Pool Player.

For many years acknowledged as the leading pocket billiard player of the east and twice winner of the international title, Frenk Sherman was defeated recently in New York for the world's championship by Alfred de Oro.

ONE OF BOSTON'S STANDBYS

Hall, Whose Clever Pitching Helped Win Championship, Began Career at First Base.

Pitcher Charley Hall, whose clever work aided materially in winning the American league championship for the Boston Red Sox, began his professional baseball career on the Santa Barbara (Cal.) team, playing first base. The first game he ever pitched was for the San Francisco team of the Pacific Coast league in 1904. The next year he joined the Cincinnati team, going from there to Columbus, O. In 1908 he was with St. Paul, and went to the Boston Americans in the middle of the 1910 season. He is a right hander, but bats with his left.

Charley Hall.

Huge Profits for McAleer.

The Boston American league club has proved a little gold mine for James R. McAleer during his one year's connection with the team. He has $200,000 in the Boston club, of which $130,000 represents his savings. The remaining $70,000 was borrowed without interest from President Comiskey, of the Chicago White Sox. McAleer tells with pride that for the last eight years his income as manager and scout has been $20,000 a season. He saved his money. Already the profits for this season nearly equal his investment, and counting the world's series he will have a sung sum left over.

Peculiar Touchdown.

One of the most remarkable errors ever made in a football game is reported from Lowell, where Dean academy played the Lowell Technical school. In the course of the contest Kowall of the academy eleven blocked a kick on Lowell's five-yard line. He picked up the ball ran 60 yards toward his own goal line. He was in full flight when he discovered his mistake. He turned and ran back 65 yards in the right direction and made a touchdown.

Entries for 1913 Glidden Tour.

Pledges of 25 entries for the next Glidden tour have been given to Charles J. Glidden during the first three days of his tour over the lakes-to-the-gulf route. Motorists have given him an enthusiastic welcome at the completion of each day's tour.

Open Public Golf Course.

Liverpool's first municipal golf links have been thrown open to the public. The green fee is sixpence per round of 18 holes, and this applies to all comers.

ORIGINAL 'BONEHEAD' PLAYER

Inventor of Expressions Which Have Become Byword in Baseball Was Southern Leaguer.

Eddie Ashenback, the well-known minor league manager who died recently, was the inventor of the expression "bonehead," which, with "concrete dome," "cement skull," solid ivory," has become a byword in baseball. When Ashenback was managing the Shreveport team of the Southern league several years ago, he had a good catcher, who could also hit some, but he had the very serious weakness of not being able to gauge a foul fly, no matter how easy it was.

One day a batter raised a high foul directly over the plate, and the catcher, misjudging it, was hit squarely on top of the head by the descending sphere, which knocked off his mask and bounded away about thirty feet. That night Ashenback finished his supper early and was passing out of the dining room when he happened to walk behind his catcher, who was devouring his evening meal with gusto and enthusiasm. Stopping at the table, Ed passed his hands over the backstop's head, feeling for the bump which he thought would surely be there on account of the contact with the ball that afternoon. But there was no lump to be felt. "No, wonder," said Ash. "How could there be a bump? Your head is a solid bone."

NOTES of SPORTDOM

Joe Birmingham may be a bench manager of the Naps next season.

Denver of the Western league wants the services of Bill Lelivelt, the Minneapolis pitcher.

Gabby Street is rapidly going through the alphabet of minor leagues. He is out of the double A's.

Chicago boxers help keep their town on the map if they do appear at home only for photographic purposes.

The Buffalo fans believe that Hugh Duffy, ex-Milwaukee manager, will pilot the Bison ship next season.

Beals Becker, the speedy youngster and sub outfielder of the Giants, will most likely be a regular next season.

World's series publicity is a two-edged scimitar. It made a hero out of Hugh Bedient and a bum out of Snodgrass.

Owner Lennon of the St. Paul club of the American association wants Johnny Kling for manager of the Saints next year.

From developments this year it would seem that players' organization was to be given an immediate chance to prove its worth.

Jim McGuire says the reason pitchers don't hit is because hitters don't pitch. Which lines James up as a maker of epigrams.

Here's a ball player that would like to become an aviator—Bill Chappelle, a pitcher of the Chattanooga team of the Southern league.

Vean Gregg, the Naps' star southpaw pitcher, and his father have opened a plastering contracting business in Edmonton, Alta.

Pitcher Ray Fisher of the New York Americans has been coaching the Middlebury football squad since the close of the baseball season.

Jake Daubert, star first baseman of the National league, used to be kicked around the Southern league before he made his big league debut.

The term "free agent" in baseball means precisely that the player is allowed to draw his breath without the consent of the club owner.

Something no other big league manager can boast of—Roger Bresnahan holds this one record: He is the only major league manager fired by a woman.

The Brooklyn club is to turn over Harry Van Buskirk, a pitcher secured during the closing days of the season, to the Newark club for a year of conditioning.

PLAN A NEW COMBINE

Movement Under Way to Form Rival of "Big Nine."

Five Colleges and Universities Included in Conference in Middle West—Notre Dame and Marquette Are Included.

A movement is on foot which will, if it materializes, result in a new conference of colleges and universities in the middle west. Sponsors for the plans are working secretly and with a dispatch that augurs well for ultimate success.

Notre Dame, Marquette and Wabash have been named as charter members, with the possible inclusion of the Michigan agricultural college and Lawrence university. There will be six or eight institutions in the conference, and it will enter upon its official existence in the fall with the opening of the 1913 football season.

An effort was made last spring, it will be remembered, to form a conference of the Catholic universities in the middle west, but owing to the weakness of the teams the plan was abandoned. The necessity of cementing athletic relations between the prospective members of the new conference is recognized as the principal reason for the launching of the combine.

The strength of the institutions named for membership is too well known to need advertising. Notre Dame has always turned out a football team that made it a feared rival on any gridiron and a sure-fire contender for the championship of Indiana every year. Wabash, the home of the "Little Giants," has given the South Bend eleven a bitter fight, and a meeting always brews oodles of interest.

Marquette and Notre Dame have a three-year tie to wipe out, which says plenty for the evenness of the two teams representing these schools. They will endeavor to settle their differences Thanksgiving day at Comiskey park. Michigan "Aggies" have always been bitter football foes of Notre Dame, and is a powerful team. Lawrence this year walloped Marquette, demonstrating that it is a worthy candidate for membership in the new conference.

While the plans are in the making discussion of the rules which would govern eligibility of football players has already taken place in a sketchy way. The majority of the schools in line for membership already comply with the regulations that govern the "big nine" with the exception of the training table. Notre Dame, Marquette and Wabash have promised, it is understood, to enforce the freshmen rule, and the abolition of the training table may follow.

ART ERDAHL

Minnesota has long been noted for its brilliant football players and among the most prominent this season is Art Erdahl, the subject of the illustration given herewith.

Cuba an Isle of Real Sports.

That Cuba is a real sporting island is proved by the fact that they have got several baseball clubs from the United States, including the New Orleans Southern league team, to play ball there this winter, and are also negotiating with the Tulane college football eleven, of New Orleans, to have that team play a post-season game around the Christmas holidays with the University of Havana team.

Motorboat Race Aross Atlantic?

Thomas Fleming, who crossed the Atlantic ocean in a small power boat, is trying to arrange a motor race from New York to Paris. Sir Thomas Lipton is said to have agreed to build a yacht for the race, provided there are three other entrants, and he suggests that the contest finish at the house of commons of London on Westminster bay, instead of Paris.

Outfield is Hard Job.

"Wahoo Sam" Crawford, the slugging right fielder of the Detroit Tigers, says that the outfield is as difficult to play as any other position on the team. "There are a lot of angles in the outer garden," avers Sam, "and mistakes in that department are usually costly."

RELICS OF SAVAGES

Objects to Be Found in Pennsylvania University Exhibit.

Arts Are of New Zealander—Canoes and Implements of War Were Once Used by Cannibal Ancestors of Civilized People.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The University of Pennsylvania museum is making a special effort to secure as many collections and as much data from the islands of the South Pacific as is possible, and Director Gordon is sparing neither time nor money in securing additions to the present South Sea exhibit. The reason for this is that antiques and relics of the aborigines of that part of the world are extremely rare and can be obtaned only at the greatest difficulty and expense.

When the South Sea islands were first discovered by Capt. Cook, the natives had a well developed artistic sense and made many beautiful things, but with the colonization of the islands by Europeans and the coming of western customs native arts at once became extinct. Fortunately, the early travelers brought to Europe numerous collections which have, for the most part, remained in private hands to the present day. Now, however, they are gradually finding their way to continental auction rooms, where they are publicly sold.

The university museum is keeping a sharp lookout for such sales and has an agent in London, where most collections are sold. He has special instructions to watch for the sale of South Pacific collections and buy them for the University of Pennsylvania, the cost not being considered. In the last few months he has secured some very valuable material and is now on the trail of more.

At present there is on temporary exhibition in the museum a New Zealand collection which is one of the finest in existence, purchased by the museum's agent in London last June. It was a private collection, more than 100 years old. The agent heard of it in May and the opportunity was so unusual that Dr. Gordon himself went to London. After successfully bidding with representatives of some of the largest museums and private collectors in the world, Director Gordon secured it for the university.

South Sea Island Granary.

"We have now one of the finest and most complete South Pacific collections in the whole world," said Dr. Gordon recently. "This is especially true of the collection from New Zealand, the largest of these islands. Indeed, so remarkable is this collection that the New Zealand museum at Wellington has asked us for casts of the relics and antiques we have from that country. In the new wing of the museum, which will be completed next spring, the South Pacific hall—particularly that devoted to the Maoris, the aborigines of New Zealand—will be the principal feature."

The New Zealand exhibit includes many weapons, tools, clothing, utensils, musical instruments, feather robes and exceptionally beautiful specimens of weaving by the Maori women. The most valuable part consists of three preserved tattooed heads of Maori chieftains, which are of great antiquity.

RETURNS HIS SON TO PRISON

California Ranchman Takes Offspring Back to Jail When He Breaks His Parole.

San Quentin, Cal.—D. W. Lamb, a Shasta county ranchman, brought his son, who had broken parole, to the state penitentiary here and turned him over to Warden Hoyle, ending a 300-mile journey. The son, Frank Lamb, was sent to the penitentiary July 7, 1904, on a grand larceny charge. He was paroled April 17, 1907, and returned to his father's ranch, but later took to the road.

Lamb was traced to Washington by the prison officials. He returned home recently out of funds, and his father immediately set out with him to the prison.

"I would rather have my son behind the bars," said Lamb, "than to have him at large through having broken a promise."

Australia to Save Giant Trees.

Melbourne.—A popular movement has been set on foot in Australia to preserve the gigantic stringy barks, various species of eucalyptus, of that country, which far exceed in height the famous "big trees" of California and are the tallest trees in the world. These trees sometimes attain heights ranging from 400 to 500 feet. Their timber is exceedingly valuable and for this reason they have been ruthlessly destroyed by lumbermen, while no proper steps have been taken to provide for their reproduction.

New Trick in Hanging Men.

Atlanta, Ga.—The next man who is legally hanged in Georgia may have the experience of dying with the knot adjusted under his right jaw instead of against the jugular vein on the left. County officials are interested in the theory that the knot, adjusted under the right part of the chin, is certain to produce immediate unconsciousness through the same process as the boxer's knockout blow on the point of the jaw.

RELATIONS WITH OTHER NATIONS

Foreign Affairs Is Subject of Message From President.

IS FIRST ONE OF A SERIES

Merit System in Consular and Diplomatic Corps—Department of State's Good Work for Latin-American Republics.

Washington, Dec. 3.—President Taft submitted to congress today the first of several messages. It was devoted to our foreign relations and in part was as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: The foreign relations of the United States actually and potentially affect the state of the Union to a degree not widely realized and hardly surpassed by any other factor in the welfare of the whole nation. The position of the United States in the moral, intellectual, and material relations of the family of nations should be a matter of vital interest to every patriotic citizen. The national prosperity and power impose upon us duties which we can not shirk if we are to be true to our ideals. The tremendous growth of the export trade of the United States has already made that trade a very real factor in the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country. With the development of our industries the foreign commerce of the United States must rapidly become a still more essential factor in its economic welfare. Whether we have a far-seeing and wise diplomacy and are not recklessly plunged into unnecessary wars, and whether our foreign policies are based upon an intelligent grasp of present-day world conditions and a clear view of the potentialities of the future, or are governed by a temporary and timid expediency or by narrow views befitting an infant nation, are questions in the alternative consideration of which must convince any thoughtful citizen that no department of national polity offers greater opportunity for promoting the interests of the whole people on the one hand, or greater chance on the other of permanent national injury, than that which deals with the foreign relations of the United States.

The fundamental foreign policies of the United States should be raised high above the conflict of partisanship and wholly dissociated from differences as to domestic policy. In its foreign affairs the United States should present to the world a united front. The intellectual, financial and industrial interests of the country and the publicist, the wage earner, the farmer, and citizen of whatever occupation must co-operate in a spirit of high patriotism to promote that national solidarity which is indispensable to national efficiency and to the attainment of national ideals.

The relations of the United States with all foreign powers remain upon a sound basis of peace, harmony and friendship. A greater insistence upon justice to American citizens or interests wherever it may have been denied and a stronger emphasis of the need of mutuality in commercial and other relations have only served to strengthen our friendships with foreign countries by placing those friendships upon a firm foundation of realities as well as aspirations.

Reorganization of the State Department.

At the beginning of the present administration the United States, having fully entered upon its position as a world power, with the responsibilities thrust upon it by the results of the Spanish-American war, and already engaged in laying the groundwork of a vast foreign trade upon which it should one day become more and more dependent, found itself without the machinery for giving thorough attention to, and taking effective action upon, a mass of intricate business vital to American interests in every country in the world.

The department of state was an archaic and inadequate machine lacking most of the attributes of the foreign office of any great modern power. With an appropriation made upon my recommendation by the congress on August 5, 1909, the department of state was completely reorganized. There were created divisions of Latin-American affairs and of far eastern, near eastern, and western European affairs. To these divisions were called from the foreign service diplomatic and consular officers possessing experience and knowledge gained by actual service in different parts of the world and thus familiar with political and commercial conditions in the regions concerned. The work was highly specialized. The result is that where previously this government from time to time would emphasize in its foreign relations one or another policy, now American interests in every quarter of the globe are being cultivated with equal assiduity.

Merit System in Consular and Diplomatic Corps.

Expert knowledge and professional training must evidently be the essence of this reorganization. Without a trained foreign service there would not be men available for the work in the reorganized department of state. President Cleveland has taken the first step toward introducing the merit system in the foreign service. That had been followed by the application of the merit principle, with excellent results, to the entire consular branch. Almost nothing, however, had been done in this direction with regard to the diplomatic service. In this age of commercial diplomacy it was evidently of the first importance to train an adequate personnel in that branch of the service. Therefore, on November 26, 1909, by an executive order I placed the diplomatic service up to the grade of secretary of embassy, inclusive, upon exactly the same strict non-partisan basis of the merit system, rigid examination for appointment and promotion only for efficiency, as had been maintained without exception in the consular service.

Successful Efforts in Promotion of Peace.

In the field of work toward the ideals of peace this government negotiated, but to my regret was unable to consummate, two arbitration treaties which set the highest mark of the aspiration of nations toward the substitution of arbitration and reason for war in the settlement of international disputes. Through the efforts of American diplomacy several wars have been prevented or ended. I refer to the successful tripartite mediation of the Argentine republic, Brazil, and the United States between Peru and Ecuador; the bringing of the boundary dispute between Panama and Costa Rica to peaceful arbitration; the staying of warlike preparations when Hayti and the Dominican republic were on the verge of hostilities; the stopping of a war in Nicaragua; the halting of internecine strife in Honduras. The government of the United States was thanked for its influence toward the restoration of amicable relations between the Argentine republic and Bolivia. The diplomacy of the United States is active in seeking to assuage the remaining ill-feeling between this country and the Republic of Colombia. In the recent Civil war in China the United States successfully joined with the other interested powers in urging an early cessation of hostilities. An agreement has been reached between the governments of Chile and Peru whereby the celebrated Tacna-Arica dispute, which has so long embittered international relations on the west coast of South America, has at last been adjusted. Simultaneously came the news that the boundary dispute between Peru and Ecuador had entered upon a stage of amicable settlement. The position of the United States in reference to the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru has been one of nonintervention, but one of friendly influence and pacific counsel throughout the period during which the dispute in question has been the subject of interchange of views between this government and the two governments immediately concerned.

China.

In China the policy of encouraging financial investment to enable that country to help itself has had the result of giving new life and practical application to the open-door policy. The consistent purpose of the present administration has been to encourage the use of American capital in the development of China by the promotion of those essential reforms to which China is pledged by treaties with the United States and other powers. The hypothecation to foreign bankers in connection with certain industrial enterprises, such as the Hukuang railways, of the national revenues upon which these reforms depended, led the department of state early in the administration to demand for American citizens participation in such enterprises, in order that the United States might have equal rights and an equal voice in all questions pertaining to the disposition of the public revenues concerned. The same policy of promoting international accord among the powers having similar treaty rights as ourselves in the matters of reform, which could not be put into practical effect without the common consent of all, was likewise adopted in the case of the loan desired by China for the reform of its currency.

Central America Needs Our Help In

In Central America the aim has been to help such countries as Nicaragua and Honduras to help themselves. They are the immediate beneficiaries. The national benefit to the United States is two-fold. First, it is obvious that the Monroe doctrine is more vital in the neighborhood of the Panama canal and the zone of the Caribbean than anywhere else. There, too, the maintenance of that doctrine falls most heavily upon the United States. It is therefore essential that the countries within that sphere shall be removed from the jeopardy involved by heavy foreign debt and chaotic national finances and from the ever-present danger of international complications due to disorder at home. Hence the United States has been glad to encourage and support American bankers who were willing to lend a helping hand to the financial rehabilitation of such coutries because this financial rehabilitation and the protection of their custom houses from being the prey of would-be dictators would remove at one stroke the menace of foreign creditors and the menance of revolutionary disorder.

The second advantage to the United States is one affecting chiefly all the southern and gulf ports and the business and industry of the south. The republics of Central America and the Caribbean possess great natural wealth. They need only a measure of stability and the means of financial regeneration to enter upon an era of peace and prosperity, bringing profit and happiness to themselves and at the same time creating conditions sure to lead to a flourishing interchange of trade with this country.

I wish to call your especial attention to the recent occurrences in Nicaragua, for I believe the terrible events recorded there during the revolution of the past summer—the useless loss of life, the devastation of property, the bombardment of defenseless cities, the killing and wounding of women and children, the torturing of noncombatants to exact contributions, and the suffering of thousands of human beings—might have been averted had the department of state, through approval of the loan convention by the senate, been permitted to carry out its now well-developed policy of encouraging the extending of financial aid to weak Central American states with the primary objects of avoiding just such revolutions by assisting those republics to rehabilitate their finances, to establish their currency on a stable basis, to remove the custom houses from the danger of revolutions by arranging for their secure administration, and to establish reliable banks.

Agricultural Credits.

A most important work, accomplished in the past year by the American diplomatic officers in Europe, is the investigation of the agricultural credit system in the European countries. Both as a means to afford relief to the consumers of this country through a more thorough development of agricultural resources and as a means of more sufficiently maintaining the agricultural population, the project to establish credit facilities for the farmers is a concern of vital importance to this nation. No evidence of prosperity among well-established farmers should blind us to the fact that lack of capital is preventing a development of the nation's agricultural resources and an adequate increase of the land under cultivation; that agricultural production is fast falling behind the increase in population; and that, in fact, although these well-established farmers are maintained in increasing prosperity because of the natural increase in population, we are not developing the industry of agriculture.

The need of capital which American farmers feel today had been experienced by the farmers of Europe, with ago. The problem had been success- their centuries-old farms, many years fully solved in the old world and it was evident that the farmers of this country might profit by a study of their systems. I therefore ordered, through the department of state, an investigation to be made by the diplomatic officers in Europe, and I have laid the results of this investigation before the governors of the various states with the hope that they will be used to advantage in their forthcoming meeting.

Increase of Foreign Trade.

In my last annual message I said that the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, was noteworthy as marking the highest record of exports of American products to foreign countries. The fiscal year 1912 shows that this rate of advance has been maintained, the total domestic exports having a valuation approximately of $2,200,000,000, as compared with a fraction over $2,000,000,000 the previous year. It is also significant that manufactured and partly manufactured articles continue to be the chief commodities forming the volume of our augmented exports, the demands of our own people for consumption requiring that an increasing proportion of our abundant agricultural products be kept at home. In the fiscal year 1911 the exports of articles in the various stages of manufacture, not including foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured, amounted approximately to $907,500,000. In the fiscal year 1912 the total was nearly $1,022,000,000, a gain of $114,000,000.

Advantage of Maximum and Minimum Tariff Provision.

The importance which our manufactures have assumed in the commerce of the world in competition with the manufactures of other countries again draws attention to the duty of this government to use its utmost endeavors to secure impartial treatment for American products in all markets. Healthy commercial rivalry in international intercourse is best assured by the possession of proper means for protecting and promoting our foreign trade. It is natural that competitive countries should view with some concern this steady expansion of our commerce. If in some instances the measure taken by them to meet it are not entirely equitable, a remedy should be found. In former messages I have described the negotiations of the department of state with foreign governments for the adjustment of the maximum and minimum tariff as provided in section 2 of the tariff law of 1909. The advantages secured by the adjustment of our trade relations under this law have continued during the last year, and some additional cases of discriminatory treatment of which we had reason to complain have been removed. The department of state has for the first time in the history of this country obtained substantial most-favored-nation treatment from all the countries of the world. There are, however, other instances which, while apparently not constituting undue discrimination in the sense of section 2, are nevertheless exceptions to the complete equity of tariff treatment for American products that the department of state consistently has sought to obtain for American commerce abroad.

Necessity for Supplementary Legislation.

These developments confirm the opinion conveyed to you in my annual message of 1911, that while the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law of 1909 has been fully justified by the success achieved in removing previously existing undue discriminations against American products, yet experience has shown that this feature of the law should be amended in such way as to prevent a fully effective means of meeting the varying degrees of discriminatory treatment of American commerce in foreign countries still encountered, as well as to protect against injurious treatment on the part of foreign governments, through either legislative or administrative measures, the financial interests abroad of American citizens whose enterprises enlarge the market for American commodities.

I can not too strongly recommend to congress the passage of some such enabling measure as the bill which was recommended by the secretary of state in his letter of December 13, 1911. The object of the proposed legislation is, in brief, to enable the executive to apply, as the case may require, to any or all commodities, whether or not on the free list from a country which discriminates against the United States, a graduated scale of duties up to the maximum of 25 per cent. ad valorem provided in the present law. Flat tariffs are out of date.

The message told what the government has done in connection with the Balkan war and in placing the government of Liberia in position to pay its debts. The new condition of affairs in China was set forth, and then our relations with Central and South American governments were set forth in more detail. It concluded as follows:

Congress should fully realize the conditions which obtain in the world as we find ourselves at the threshold of our middle age as a nation. We have emerged full grown as a peer in the great concourse of nations. We have passed through various formative periods. We have been self-centered in the struggle to develop our domestic resources and deal with our domestic questions. The nation is now too mature to continue in its foreign relations those temporary expedients natural to a people to whom domestic affairs are the sole concern. In the past our diplomacy has often consisted, in normal times, in a mere assertion of the right to international existence. We are now in a larger relation with broader rights of our own and obligations to others than ourselves. A number of great guiding principles were laid down early in the history of this government. The recent task of our diplomacy has been to adjust those principles to the conditions of today, to develop their corollaries, to find practical applications of the old principles expanded to meet new situations. Thus are being evolved bases upon which can rest the superstructure of policies which must grow with the destined progress of this nation. The successful conduct of our foreign relations demands a broad and a modern view. We can not meet new questions nor build for the future if we confine ourselves to outworn dogmas of the past and to the perspective appropriate at our emergence from colonial times and conditions. The opening of the Panama canal will mark a new era in our international life and create new and world-wide conditions which, with their vast correlations and consequences, will obtain for hundreds of years to come. We must not wait for events to overtake us unawares. With continuity of purpose we must deal with the problems of our external relations by a diplomacy modern, resourceful, magnanimous, and fittingly expressive of the high ideals of a great nation.

RADICAL CURRENCY REFORM IS URGED

MAC VEAGH HOLDS PRESENT METHODS RESPONSIBLE FOR DISASTERS.

AN ADEQUATE SOLUTION.

Estimated Deficit for Wilson's First Year in Office is $52,730,455. —Recall Bill Is Up.

Washington, Dec. 5.—Strongly urging radical reform of the "unreasoned and unscientific" banking and currency system of the United States, Franklin MacVeagh, secretary of the treasury, freely warns congress in his annual report that the federal government, as long as the present scheme exists, will be exclusively responsible for the commercial, industrial and social disasters which flow from panics and attack, directly or indirectly, every home in the nation.

The present system promotes and developes panics and legislation is urgent, declared Mr. MacVeagh, in outlining his idea of the necessary general provisions of an adequate relief measure. Aside from affording flexible and elastic currency and reserves, such a revision, he says, would bring the bank into organized co-operation and provide for a central agency through which they could work together, free of political or trust control.

According to the estimates of the treasury department the secretary foresees a deficit of $22,556,023, exclusive of Panama canal expenditures, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the first fiscal year of President Wilson's administration. Including the canal expenses the deficit is estimated at $52,730,455. The canal expenditures, he adds, however, may be paid under the law from bond sales. The estimated receipts for that year are $710,000,000, while the ordinary appropriations are estimated at $732,556,023, and the canal expenditures at $30,174,432. Undoubtedly having probable tariff revision in mind the secretary announces that these estimates are based upon present conditions and laws.

In connection with financial reform, Mr. MacVeagh says the people are helpless under existing evils. The present system never permits free action at any time, because its liability to sudden constraint and restriction is always a part of the nation's financial consciousness.

Features of Relief Measure.

A relief measure reforming the banking and currency system, the secretary declares "must include, among its necessary features, provisions for never-failing reserves and never-failing currency, and for the perfect elasticity and flexibility of both; for the permanent organization and organized cooperation of the banks, which are now suffering and causing the nation to suffer by reason of their unorganized state; for a central agency, to represent and act for the organized and cooperative banks—this agency to be securely free from political or trust control, but with the government having adequate and intimate supervision of it; for independent banking units—so independent that no one bank can be owned, controlled or shared in any degree, directly or indirectly, by any other bank; for the equality of all banks, national or state, both as to standard and as to functions—so that every requirement made of a national bank must be complied with equally by a state bank, and every function or privilege enjoyed by a state bank shall be enjoyed by a national bank; for the utilization and the fluidity of bank assets; for the scientific development of exchanges—domestic and foreign; for foreign banking as an adjunct of our foreign commerce; and for taking the treasury department out of the banking business.

RESISTED EVIDENCE REMOVAL

RYAN ADVISED BY ATTORNEY TO HOLD PAPERS.

Declares He Was Never Criticised for Destruction of "Blue Book."

Indianapolis, Dec. 5.—Frank M. Ryan, indicted president of the Iron Workers' union, testified at the "dynamite conspiracy" trial that after the arrests of the McNamaras, he on advice of counsel, resisted the removal of evidence wanted at Los Angeles where the McNamaras were charged with murder and dynamiting.

"Knowing James B. McNamara was charged with murder in blowing up the Los Angeles Times building and that John J. McNamara, secretary of the union, was charged with dynamiting, you were willing to prevent the removal of evidence wanted at Los Angeles," District Attorney Miller asked.

"I was willing to resist the removal of the papers anywhere, because I was acting through my attorney," Mr. Ryan said.

The papers referred to were hundreds of letters and records afterwards procurred by the government in connection with the indictment of the 41 men now on trial. The witness named as the attorney who took charge of the union's affairs, Leo M. Rappaport, who had testified that after interviewing J. J. McNamara in jail at Los Angeles he returned to Indianapolis and destroyed a small blue check book. That check book, the government charges, contained the disbursements by McNamara for the expenses of the "dynamite crew."

Mr. Ryan was asked whether he was criticized about the destruction of the check book. He replied, he was not and had never heard of McNamara drawing $1,000 a month from the union's funds until McNamara's arrest in April, 1911.

Judge Anderson ruled that Mr. Miller's characterisation was "improper."

FAKIR INDICTED.

Claimed to Have Invented Dollar That Would Return to Spender.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Felicks Markiewicz, alleged expert in "black art," who claimed to have invented a dollar that would return to its original owner after it had been spent, has been indicted by the federal grand jury.

Markiewicz was charged with having duped many foreign residents in New York, Chicago and other cities. He sold his black art secrets at prices ranging from $1.25 to $7.75.

Markiewicz, among other things, advertised the following "secrets:" How to win the love of every girl; how to become invisible so that you might do as you please without being detected; how to compel a thief to return stolen property; how to make a cow give good milk in unlimited quantities; how to read another person's thoughts; how to see angels in the mirror; how to bow magnetic and attract your boss to you so that you may have the best position wherever you work.

Governors' Conference.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 5.—Permanent organizations of the various states of the United States in an association to be known as the "Governors' conference" was effected here at the annual conference of the state executives. Colorado Springs, Col., was selected as the place of meeting for the conference next year.

DAILY MARKET REPORT.

Twin City Markets.

Minneapolis, Dec. 5. — Wheat, Dec. 80¾c; May, 85⅝c; No. 1 northern, 83⅝c; No. 2 northern, 81⅜c; No. 1 durum, 80⅜c; No. 3 corn, 44½c; No. 3 white oats, 30¼c; barley, malting, 58c; No. 3 rye, 56½c; No. 1 flax, $1.27⅛.

Duluth, Dec. 5.—Wheat, Dec., 80¾c; May, 85⅝c; No. 1 northern, 81⅝c; No. 1 durum, 84c.

South St. Paul, Dec. 5. — Cattle — Steers, $6.50@8.60; cows, $4.25@6.25; calves, $4.00@9.25; hogs, $7.15@7.35; sheep and lambs, $3.75@7.00.

Chicago Livestock.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Cattle receipts, 19,000; market slow, 10c to 20c lower; beeves, $5.60@10.90; Texas steers, $4.40@5.65; western steers, $5.40@9; stockers and feeders, $4.35@7.65; cows and heifers, $2.70@7.45; calves, $6.50@10.25. Hog receipts, 38,000; market slow, 5c lower; light, $7.20@7.60; mixed, $7.25@7.65; heavy, $7.25@7.67½; rough, $7.25@7.45; pigs, $5.25@7.15; bulk of sales, $7.50@7.65. Sheep receipts, 25,000; market strong; native, $3.65@4.65; western, $3.90@4.60; yearlings, $5.65@6.25; lambs, native, $5.75@7.65; western, $5.75@7.60.

Chicago Grain.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Disappointment at easy cables made wheat traders today less disposed to work on the buying side. Fine weather for the Argentine harvest was an influence also against the bulls. Export demand at Kansas City, however, tended to steady the market. The opening varied from ⅛c lower to ⅛c advance. May started at 90⅛c to 90⅛c, ranging from ⅛c off to ⅛c up, and sagged to 90⅛c.

Liberal commission selling, partly based on free offerings in Ohio, had a weakening effect on corn. May opened a shade lower to a like amount up at 48⅛c to 48¼c, and fell to 48⅛@48⅛c.

Export inquiry held oats relatively steady. May, which started ⅛c down to ⅛c advance, at 32⅛c to 32⅛@33c, touched 33c, and then reacted to 32⅛@32⅛c.

Would Bar Inter-marriage of Races.

East St. Louis, Ill., Dec. 5.—A bill prohibiting the intermarriage of races will be introduced into the next legislature by Charles A. Garch, a member from St. Clair county, he has just announced in consequence of the marriage in Chicago of Jack Johnson and Lucile Cameron. His bill will be drafted primarily to prevent the marriage of whites and blacks, but it will result, if passed, in the prohibition of all race inter-marriages in accomplishing this end.

Believed Greece Will Sign Armistice After Fall of Two Strongholds—Greece May Continue War, However.

London, Dec. 5. — The Constantinople correspondent of the Post telegraphs:

"From what was told me at the porte, I infer that the fall of Chios and Janina is imminent, and that Greece will sign the armistice immediately afterwards."

The Belgrade correspondent of the Daily Telegraph asserts that Austria again is pressing her demands on Servia and asking for an immediate reply.

"The situation," the correspondent adds, "is critical—even dangerous. It is reported that Austria has now 300,000 troops within striking distance of the Servian frontier, and many vessels are assembled in readiness to transport the troops across the rivers Save and Danube.

According to a despatch to the Daily Mail from Sofia, each state will nominate three delegates, one being a military officer, to the peace conference.

The Turkish delegates, a Constantinople despatch to the Daily Mail says, will not be appointed until Bulgaria names her plenipotentiaries, when Turkish delegates of equal rank will be chosen.

Greece May Continue War.

Athens.—Commending on the conclusion of the armistice the Athens newspapers express the conviction that the government will, if necessary continue the war without her allies.

According to advices from Saloniki, the Greeks are meeting with considerable opposition in Epirus. The Turkish army, which retreated from Monastir, has not surrendered, but small detachments continue to lay down their arms.

DEMOCRATS ELECT

National League Favors Single Term for President.

Washington, Dec. 5.—The National League of Democratic clubs concluded its sessions here by the election of officers and the adoption of resolutions recommending the ceremonies of swearing in of the president and attendant pageants not be separated, favoring but one term of office for president and deploring as unjust and reprehensible the manner in which the Panama canal zone was acquired.

The following officers were elected: President, Perry Belmont, New York; first vice president, Senator Hoke Smith, Georgia; second vice president, Frederick Lynch, Minnesota; third vice president, Frederick Plaisted, North Carolina; fourth vice president, J. Lentz, Ohio; fifth vice president, Charles G. Heifner, Washington; secretary and organizer, Wm. C. Liller, Indiana; treasurer, John W. Cox, New York; sergeant-at-arms, Col. John I. Martin, Missouri.

Honorary presidents of the club were chosen as follows:

SCHOONER IS LOST

Lake Boat, with Seventeen on Board, Believed to Have Sunk.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—The Rouse Simmon, a three-masted schooner, with Captain Herman Schuleman in command, Captain Christian Nelson and his wife as guests, and a crew of fourteen men are now believed to have gone down in Lake Michigan. The boat is two weeks overdue from Manistique, Mich., with its annual cargo of Christmas trees.

According to messages received by the Chicago harbor master and the lifesaving station officers, the Rouse Simmon was sighted off Pentwater, Mich., more than a week ago, flying distress signals and making a weak effort to keep her course during a severe gale. Near this point small pieces of wreckage and scores of Christmas trees have been found floating on the water, but no trace of the missing ship have been found.

Provisions For Life Savers.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Dec. 5.—United States revenue cutter Mackinac has left with a cargo of supplies for the life saving stations between Whitefish Point and Grand Marais. The winter supplies for these stations were lost in the sinking of the steamer South Shore, which went down off Point Sauble, Nov. 24. No other steamer being available, there seemed a probability that the families of the keepers who remained at the posts all winter would be in sore straits.

CONGRESS HEARS SECOND MESSAGE

President Tells of Treasury and Army Affairs.

PHILIPPINES ARE INCLUDED

Bill for Natives' Independennce Denounced as Premature—Progress of Panama Canal.

Washington, Dec. 6.—Congress today received from President Taft the second of his messages to the short session. It deals with fiscal, military, insular and judicial affairs and in part is as follows:

The condition of the country with reference to business could hardly be better. While the four years of the administration now drawing to a close have not developed great speculative expansion or a wide field of new investment, the recovery and progress made from the depressing conditions following the panic of 1907 have been steady and the improvement has been clear and easily traced in the statistics. The business of the country is now on a solid basis. Credits are not unduly extended and every phase of the situation seems in a state of preparedness for a period of unexampled prosperity. Manufacturing concerns are running at their full capacity and the demand for labor was never so constant and growing. The foreign trade of the country for this year will exceed $4,000,000,000, while the balance in our favor—that of the excess of exports over imports—will exceed $500,000,000. More than half our exports are manufactures or partly manufactured material, while our exports of farm products do not show the same increase of domestic consumption. It is a year of bumper crops; the total money value of farm products will exceed $9,500,000,000. It is a year when the bushel or unit price of agricultural products has gradually fallen, and yet the total value of the entire crop is greater by over $1,000,000,000 than we have known in our history.

Condition of the Treasury.

The condition of the treasury is very satisfactory. The total interest-bearing debt is $963,777,770, of which $134,631,980 constitute the Panama canal loan. The non-interest-bearing debt is $378,301,284.90, including $346,681,016 of greenbacks. We have in the treasury $150,000,000 in gold coin as a reserve against the outstanding greenbacks; and in addition we have a cash balance in the treasury as a general fund of $167,152,478.99, or an increase of $26,975,652 over the general fund last year.

Receipts and Expenditures.

For three years the expenditures of the government have decreased under the influence of an effort to economize. This year presents an apparent exception. The estimate by the secretary of the treasury of the ordinary receipts, exclusive of postal revenues, for the year ending June 30, 1914, indicates that they will amount to $170,000,000. The sum of the estimates of the expenditures for that same year, exclusive of Panama canal disbursements and postal disbursements payable from postal revenues is $722,000,000, indicating a deficit of $22,000,000. For the year ending June 30, 1913, similarly estimated receipts were $667,000,000, while the total corresponding estimate of expenditures for that year, submitted through the secretary of the treasury to congress, amounted to $654,000,000. This shows an increase of $76,000,000 in the estimates for 1914 over the total estimates of 1913. This is due to an increase of $25,000,000 in the estimate for rivers and harbors for the next year on projects and surveys authorized by congress; to an increase under the new pension bill of $32,500,000; and to an increase in the estimates for expenses of the navy department of $24,000,000. The estimate for the navy department for the year 1913 included two battleships. Congress made provision for only one battleship, and therefore the navy department has deemed it necessary and proper to make an estimate which includes the first year's expenditure for three battleships in addition to the amount required for work on the uncompleted ships now under construction. In addition to the natural increase in the expenditures for the uncompleted ships, and the additional battleship estimated for, the other increases are due to the pay required for 4,000 or more additional enlisted men in the navy, and to this must be added the additional cost of construction imposed by the change in the eight-hour law which makes it applicable to ships built in private shipyards.

With the exceptions of these three items, the estimates show a reduction this year below the total estimates for 1912 of more than $5,000,000.

The estimates for Panama canal construction for 1914 are $17,000,000 less than for 1913.

The president then explained at some length the national reserve association system recommended by the monetary commission and urged congress to examine the plan impartially from all standpoints and then to adopt some plan which will secure the benefits desired.

Concerning the tariff he had little to say in view of the fact that a new congress has been elected on a platform of tariff for revenue only.

Army Reorganization.

Our small army now consists of 82,809 men, excluding the 5,000 Philippine scouts. Leaving out of consideration the coast artillery force, whose position is fixed in our various seacoast defenses, and the present garrisons of our various insular possessions, we have today within the continental United States a mobile army of only about 35,000 men. This little force must be still further drawn upon to supply the new garrisons for the great naval base which is being established at Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian islands, and to protect the locks now rapidly approaching completion at Panama. The forces remaining in the United States are now scattered in nearly fifty posts, situated for a variety of historical reasons in twenty-four states. These posts contain only fractions of regiments, averaging less than 700 men each. In time of peace it has been our historical policy to administer these units separately by a geographical organization. In other words, our army in time of peace has never been a united organization but merely scattered groups of companies, battalions and regiments, and the first task in time of war has been to create out of these scattered units an army fit for effective teamwork and co-operation.

To the task of meeting these patent defects, the war department has been addressing itself during the past year. A comprehensive plan of reorganization was prepared by the war college division of the general staff. This plan was thoroughly discussed last summer at a series of open conferences held by the secretary of war and attended by representatives from all branches of the army and from congress. In printed form it has been distributed to members of congress and throughout the army and the national guard, and widely through institutions of learning and elsewhere in the United States. In it, for the first time, we have a tentative chart for future progress.

The National Guard.

Under existing law the national guard constitutes, after the regular army, the first line of national defense. Its organization, discipline, training, and equipment, under recent legislation, have been assimilated, as far as possible, to those of the regular army, and its practical efficiency, under the effect of this training, has very greatly increased. Our citizen soldiers under present conditions have reached a stage of development beyond which they cannot reasonably be asked to go without further direct assistance in the form of pay from the federal government. On the other hand, such pay from the national treasury would not be justified unless it produced a proper equivalent in additional efficiency on the part of the national guard. The organized militia today cannot be ordered outside of the limits of the United States, and thus cannot lawfully be used for general military purposes. The officers and men are ambitious and eager to make themselves thus available and to become an efficient national reserve of citizen soldiery. They are the only force of trained men, other than the regular army, upon which we can rely. The so-called military pay bill, in the form agreed on between the authorities of the war department and the representatives of the national guard, in my opinion adequately meets these conditions and offers a proper return for the pay which it is proposed to give to the national guard. I believe that its enactment into law would be a very long step toward providing this nation with a first line of citizen soldiery, upon which its main reliance must depend in case of any national emergency. Plans for the organization of the national guard into tactical divisions, on the same lines as those adopted for the regular army, are being formulated by the war college division of the general staff.

Porto Rico, Mr. Taft says, continues to show notable progress and he urges the senate to pass the bill granting the Porto Ricans American citizenship.

Philippines.

A bill is pending in congress, continues the message, which revolutionizes the carefully worked out scheme of government under which the Philippine islands are now governed and which proposes to render them virtually autonomous at once and absolutely independent in eight years. Such a proposal can only be founded on the assumption that we have now discharged our trusteeship to the Filipino people and our responsibility for them to the world, and that they are now prepared for self-government as well as national sovereignty. A thorough and unbiased knowledge of the facts clearly shows that these assumptions are absolutely with justification. As to this, I believe that there is no substantial difference of opinion among any of those who have had the responsibility of facing Philippine problems in the administration of the islands, and I believe that no one to whom the future of this people is a responsible concern can countenance a policy fraught with the direst consequences to those on whose behalf it is ostensibly urged.

In the Philippine islands we have embarked upon an experiment unprecedented in dealing with dependent peoples. We are developing there conditions exclusively for their own welfare. We found an archipelago containing 24 tribes and races, speaking a great variety of languages, and with a population over 80 per cent. of which could neither read nor write. Through the unifying forces of a common education, of commercial and economic development, and of gradual participation in local self-government we are endeavoring to evolve a homogeneous people fit to determine, when the time arrives, their own destiny. We are seeking to arouse a national spirit and not, as under the older colonial theory, to suppress such a spirit. The character of the work we have been doing is keenly recognized in the Orient, and our success thus far followed with not a little envy by those who, initiating the same policy, find themselves hampered by conditions grown up in earlier days and under different theories of administration. But our work is far from done. Our duty to the Filipinos is far from discharged. Over half a million Filipino students are now in the Philippine schools helping to mold the men of the future into a homogeneous people, but there still remain more than a million Filipino children of school age yet to be reached. Freed from American control the integrating forces of a common education and a common language will cease and the eucational system now well started will slip back into inefficiency and disorder.

An enormous increase in the commercial development of the islands has been made since they were virtually granted full access to our markets three years ago, with every prospect of increasing development and diversified industries. Freed from American control such development is bound to decline. Every observer speaks of the great progress in public works for the benefit of the Filipinos, of harbor improvements, of road and railways, of irrigation and artesian wells, public buildings, and better means of communication. But large parts of the islands are still unreached, still even unexplored, roads and railways are needed in many parts, irrigation systems are still to be installed and wells to be driven. Whole villages and towns are still without means of communication other than almost impassible roads and trails. Even the great progress in sanitation, which has successfully suppressed smallpox, the bubonic plague, and Asiatic cholera, has found the cause of and a cure for beriberi, has segregated the lepers, has helped to make Manila the most healthful city in the Orient, and to free life throughout the whole archipelago from its former dread diseases, is nevertheless incomplete in many essentials of permanence in sanitary policy. Even more remains to be accomplished. If freed from American control sanitary progress is bound to be arrested and all that has been achieved likely to be lost.

If the task we have undertaken is higher than that assumed by other nations its accomplishment must demand even more patience. We must not forget that we found the Filipinos wholly untrained in government. Up to our advent all other experience sought to repress rather than encourage political power. It takes long time and much experience to ingrain political habits of steadiness and efficiency. Popular self-government ultimately must rest upon common habits of thought and upon a reasonably developed public opinion. No such foundations for self-government, let alone independence, are now present in the Philippine Islands. Disregarding even their racial heterogeneity and the lack of ability to think as a nation, it is sufficient to point out that under liberal franchise privileges only about 3 per cent. of the Filipinos vote and only 5 per cent. of the people are said to read the public press. To confer independence upon the Filipinos now is, therefore, to subject the great mass of their people to the dominance of an oligarchical and, probably, exploiting minority. Such a course will be as cruel to those people as it would be shameful to us.

Our true course is to pursue steadily and courageously the path we have thus far followed; to guide the Filipinos into self-sustaining pursuits; to continue the cultivation of sound political habits through education and political practice; to encourage the diversification of industries, and to realize the advantages of their industrial education by conservatively approved co-operative methods, at once checking the dangers of concentrated wealth and building up a sturdy, independent citizenship.

Regulation of Water Power.

There are pending before congress a large number of bills proposing to grant privileges of erecting dams for the purpose of creating water power in our navigable rivers. The pendency of these bills has brought out an important defect in the existing general dam act. That act does not, in my opinion, grant sufficient power to the federal government in dealing with the construction of such dams to exact protective conditions in the interest of navigation. It does not permit the federal government, as a condition of its permit, to require that a part of the value thus created shall be applied to the further general improvement and protection of the stream. I believe this to be one of the most important matters of internal improvement now confronting the government. Most of the navigable rivers of this country are comparatively long and shallow. In order that they may be made fully useful for navigation there has come into vogue a method of improvement known as canalization, or the slack-water method, which consists in building a series of dams and locks, each of which will create a long pool of deep navigable water. At each of these dams there is usually created a long pool of deep navigable water. At each of these dams there is usually created also water power of commercial value. If the water power thus created can be made available for the further improvement of navigation in the stream, it is manifest that the improvement will be much more quickly effected on the one hand, and on the other, that the burden on the general taxpayers of the country will be very much reduced. Private interests seeking permits to building waterpower dams in navigable streams usually urge that they thus improve navigation, and that if they do not impair navigation they should be allowed to take for themselves the entire profits of the water-power development. Whatever they may do by way of relieving the government of the expense of improving navigation should be given due consideration, but it must be apparent that there may be a profit beyond a reasonably liberal return upon the private investment which is a potential asset of the government in carrying out a comprehensive policy of waterway development. It is no objection to the retention and use of such an asset by the government that a comprehensive waterway policy will include the protection and development of the other public uses of water, which cannot and should not be ignored in making and executing plans for the protection and development of navigation. It is also equally clear that inasmuch as the water power thus created is or may be an incident of a general scheme of waterway improvement within the constitutional jurisdiction of the federal government, the regulation of such water power lies also within that jurisdiction. In my opinion constructive statesmanship requires that legislation should be enacted which will permit the development of navigation in these great rivers to go hand in hand with the utilization of this by-product of water power, created in the course of the same improvement, and that the general dam act should be so amended as to make this possible. I deem it highly important that the nation should adopt a consistent and harmonious treatment of these water-power projects, which will preserve for this purpose their value to the government, whose right it is to grant the permit. Any other policy is equivalent to throwing away a most valuable national asset.

The Panama Canal.

During the past year the work of construction upon the canal has progressed most satisfactorily. About 87 per cent. of the excavation work has been completed, and more than 93 per cent. of the concrete for all the locks is in place. In view of the great interest which has been manifested as to some slides in the Culebra Cut, I am glad to say that the report of Col. Goethals should allay any apprehension on this point. It is gratifying to note that none of the slides which occurred during this year would have interfered with the passage of the ships had the canal, in fact, been in operation, and when the slope pressures will have been finally adjusted and the growth of vegetation will minimize erosion in the banks of the cut, the slide problem will be practically solved and an ample stability assured for the Culebra Cut.

Although the official date of the opening has been set for January 1, 1915, the canal will, in fact, from present indications, be opened for shipping during the latter half of 1913. No fixed date can as yet be set, but shipping interests will be advised as soon as assurances can be given that vessels can pass through without unnecessary delay.

Recognizing the administrative problem in the management of the canal, congress in the act of August 24, 1912, has made admirable provision for executive responsibility in the control of the canal and the government of the Canal Zone. The problem of most efficient organization is receiving careful consideration, so that a scheme of organization and control best adapted to the conditions of the canal may be formulated and put in operation as expeditiously as possible. Acting under the authority conferred on me by congress, I have, by executive proclamation, promulgated the following schedule of tolls for ships passing through the canal, based upon the thorough report of Emory R. Johnson, special commissioner on traffic and tolls:

1. On merchant vessels carrying passengers or cargo, $1.20 per net vessel ton—each 100 cubic feet—of actual capacity.

2. On vessels in ballast without passengers or cargo, 40 per cent. less than the rate of tolls for vessels with passengers or cargo.

3. Upon naval vessels, other than transports, colliers, hospital ships, and supply ships, 50 cents per displacement ton.

4. Upon army and navy transports, colliers, hospital ships, and supply ships, $1.20 per net ton, the vessels to be measured by the same rules as are employed in determining the net tonnage of merchant vessels.

Rules for the determination of the tonnage upon which toll charges are based are now in course of preparation and will be promulgated in due season.

Panama Canal Treaty.

The proclamation which I have issued in respect to the Panama Canal tolls is in accord with the Panama Canal act passed by this congress August 24, 1912. We have been advised that the British government has prepared a protest against the act and its enforcement in so far as it relieves from the payment of tolls American ships engaged in the American coastwise trade on the ground that it violates British rights under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty concerning the Panama Canal. When the protest is presented, it will be promptly considered and an effort made to reach a satisfactory adjustment of any differences there may be between the two governments.

Workmen's Compensation Act.

The promulgation of an efficient workmen's compensation act, adapted to the particular conditions of the zone, is awaiting adequate appropriation by congress for the payment of claims arising thereunder. I urge that speedy provision be made in order that we may install upon the zone a system of settling claims for injuries in best accord with modern humane, social, and industrial theories.

Promotion for Col. Goethals.

As the completion of the canal grows nearer, and as the wonderful executive work of Col. Goethals becomes more conspicuous in the eyes of the country and of the world, it seems to me wise and proper to make provision by law for such reward to him as may be commensurate with the service that he has rendered to his country. I suggest that this reward take the form of an appointment of Col. Goethals as a major general in the army of the United States, and that the law authorizing such appointment be accompanied with a provision permitting his designation as chief of engineers upon the retirement of the present incumbent of that office.

Navy Department.

The navy of the United States is in a greater state of efficiency and is more powerful than it has been before, but in the emulation which exists between different countries in respect to the increase of naval and military armaments this condition is not a permanent one. In view of the many improvements and increases by foreign governments the slightest halt on our part in respect to new construction throws us back and reduces us from a naval power of the first rank and places us among the nations of the second rank.

A year ago congress refused to appropriate for more than one battleship. In this I think a great mistake of policy was made, and I urgently recommend that this congress make up for the mistake of the last session by appropriations authorizing the construction of three battleships, in addition to destroyers, fuel ships, and the other auxiliary vessels as shown in the building program of the general board. We are confronted by a condition in respect to the navies of the world which requires us, if we would maintain our navy as an insurance of peace, to augment our naval force by at least two battleships a year and by battle cruisers, gunboats, torpedo destroyers, and submarine boats in a proper proportion. We have no desire for war. We go as far as any nation in the world to avoid war, but we are a world power. Our population, our wealth, our definite policies, our responsibilities in the Pacific and the Atlantic, our defense of the Panama canal, together with our enormous world trade and our missionary outposts on the frontiers of civilization, require us to recognize our position as one of the foremost in the family of nations, and to clothe ourselves with sufficient naval power to give force to our reasonable demands, and to give weight to our influence in those directions of progress that a powerful Christian nation should advocate.

Department of Justice.

This department has been very active in the enforcement of the law. It has been better organized and with a larger force than ever before in the history of the government. The prosecutions which have been successfully concluded and which are now pending testify to the effectiveness of the department work.

The prosecution of trusts under the Sherman anti-trust law has gone on without restraint or diminution, and decrees similar to those entered in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases have been entered in other suits, like the suits against the powder trust and the bath tub trust. I am very strongly convinced that a steady, consistent course in this regard, with a continuing of Supreme court decisions upon the new phases of the trust question not already finally decided, is going to offer a solution of this much-discussed and troublesome issue in a quiet, calm and judicial way, without any radical legislation changing the governmental policy in regard to combinations now denounced by the Sherman anti-trust law. I have already recommended as an aid in this matter legislation which would declare unlawful certain well-known phases of unfair competition in interstate trade, and I have also advocated voluntary national incorporation for the larger industrial enterprises, with provision for a closer supervision by the bureau of corporations, or a board appointed for the purpose, so as to make certain compliance with the anti-trust law on the one hand and to give greater security to the stockholders against possible prosecutions on the other. I believe, however, that the orderly course of litigation in the courts and the regular prosecution of trusts charged with the violation of the anti-trust law is producing among business men a clearer and clearer perception of the line of distinction between business that is to be encouraged and business that is to be condemned, and that in this quiet way the question of trusts can be settled and competition retained as an economic force to secure reasonableness in prices and freedom and independence in trade.

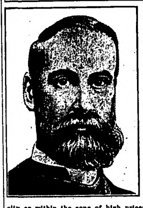
WHO'S WHO—and Why

RECTOR SAYS $1,000 IS NOT ENOUGH



Clergymen in all parts of the country are busily engaged in discussing the action of Rev. Gilbert A. Shaw, who resigned from the rectorship of Grace Episcopal church of Riverside, L. I., because "a minister at the present time cannot live and maintain his honor on a salary of $1,000 a year." Rev. Mr. Shaw, therefore, is going to acept a call to church at Hazleton, Pa., where he will receive a larger salary.

"Rev. Mr. Shaw made a very rash assertion when he said that a minister of today could not live honorably on $1,000 a year," said Rev. Arthur H. Judge, rector of St. Matthew's Episcopal church of New York city, "though, of course, whether or not a minister could live 'honorably' upon that salary depends entirely upon circumstances. The cost of living for a minister, as for anyone else, depends upon whether he is married or single, and whether or not he lives in a great city or within the zone of high prices that always surround a big city. If Riverhead, L. I., is far enough away from New York not to be affected by metropolitan prices and if Rev. Mr. Shaw has his rectory furnished rent free (like most Episcopal ministers) then he ought to live very decently upon his salary, whether he is married or not.

"There is a common impression that clergymen are underpaid as a whole, but I think that all in all they are paid as well as the members of most of the professions or vocations.

"The average young lawyer, or doctor, or bank clerk has a much harder time at first than the young minister, and the failures, who cannot even make a living in the professions, are much greater than those who fail in the ministry. It is true, however, that the cost of living has increased so that a dollar is worth about half of what it was twenty years ago, and the increase in salaries has not nearly kept pace with the increased cost of living among the average 'middle class' professional men. The salaries of laborers have been increased more in proportion, because they are united and can strike for what they want."

CHARLES S. WHITMAN WARMLY PRAISED

Warmest praise from the bench, bar and forum have recently been showered upon Charles S. Whitman, district attorney of New York city, as a tribute to his victory over the alliance of police power and gambling in the conviction of Charles Becker.

"The most notable victory of law and order in our generation in New York," were the words of a telegram to Mr. Whitman from a famous American author, and they were the keynote of the great heap of telegrams of congratulation which kept his desk covered for several days.

They were echoed in the words of the thousand others—physicians, clergymen, merchants, bankers and professional men, some who knew him only by sight, who rushed up to grip his hand and tell him how they valued what he had done to stamp graft into the earth and ring the doom of lawlessness and band violence. Some of them told him that they had prayed for him and righteousness in his glorious undertakings.

Their pious thanksgiving was one extreme of the result of Becker's conviction which spread through the whole city, touching every walk of life. In the haunts of crime the effect was most notable. In the prisons the criminals were struck with terror. The cheers they had prepared to greet Becker's acquittal turned to the frightened chatter of the thugs in the Tombs, some of them awaiting a similar fate for playing the part of tools in the murder plot which Becker conceived and directed.

The thugs knew best of all perhaps how great were the difficulties that Mr. Whitman faced and overcame almost single-handed in his battle to redeem New York from the stigma cast upon her throughout the world by the marvellous story of the murder of Rosenthal as from day to day it grew and stretched into high and low places. There was not a tear in it, but no story of crime has ever held so long the place it held in the newspapers, which reflect public interest and give room and prominence only to what the public wants to read.

NAZIM PASHA, TURKEY'S GENERALISSIMO

At the outbreak of the Turko-Balkan war, there was some uncertainty as to the precise commands of the various Turkish generals. The chief command of the Ottoman forces in Europe was assumed by Nazim Pasha, the minister of war. He received his early training at St. Cyr, the famous French military school. He is now sixty-four years old, but full of vigor and considered an able soldier. Ali Riza Pasha, according to the best sources of information, was made commander of the Turkish western army. He was trained in the German school. Mahmud Shevket Pasha was put in command of the Turkish forces operating against Servia.

Nazim Pasha was spoken of as "the Turkish Kitchener." He was one of the most brilliant pupils at St. Cyr. From time to time he has visited France, and on more than one occasion was an interested spectator of the grand autumn maneuvers. He has often expressed his gratitude for the teaching he received at the great French school, and, indeed, attributes to it the high rank to which he was advanced. His remarkable influence over the Turkish rank and file was manifested during the period between April 13 and 23, 1909, when his appeals to the mutinous soldiers saved Constantinople from plunder. Recent dispatches would indicate a decline of his great popularity. Only a few days ago in his daily official dispatch he reported that his soldiers would not fight, saying: "My sword has melted in my hand."

MEHMED V. IS A MOST KINDLY MONARCH

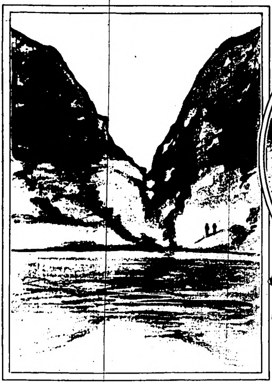
With his empire apparently tottering about his ears and his entourage preparing to flee across the Bosporus to escape the vengeance of Bulgarian swords, it is interesting to note the personality of Sultan Mehmed V, who will likely go down into history as the last Turkish monarch to reign in Europe.

Probably no more kindly monarch exists anywhere in Europe, none who thinks more of his subjects' welfare and less of himself. The sultan is remembered by those who have met him by his benign smile, with which he favors all, from the highest to the lowest. He has a melancholy, meditative face, but those who attend him hear no harsh words, shrink from no sullen commands, as did those who attended his predecessors.

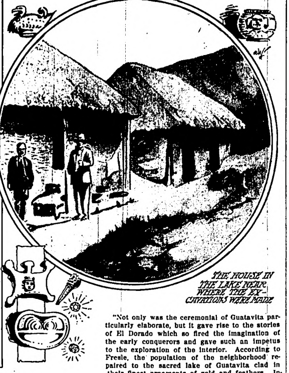
The sultan rises soon after dawn, and when his attendants bring him the habitual cup of delicious Arabian mocha he smiles to them and whispers: "Allah be praised for his gifts." His bearing is at all times affable.

There is something of the nature of Oriental fatalistic kismet in his smile, since it seems to betray a profound sense of acquiescence in the divine course of things. Perhaps today, in the most serious of all crises which have ever come upon the Ottoman empire, he still smiles, and smiling murmurs: "Allah's will be done."

SACRED LAKE GIVES UP TREASURE



LAKE GUATAVITA AS IT WAS



THE HOUSE IN THE LAKE NEAR WHERE THE EXCAVATIONS WERE MADE

IN a room on one of the upper floors of a New York hotel a man stood with a cigar box in his hand and gazed proudly at the articles that it contained. They were not cigars—not anything that one might expect to find in a cigar box; they were queer little rings and toys of thin beaten gold, rough green stones, dulled circles of golden-brown amber. The man took them out of the box and held them in his hand.

"El Dorado," he said softly, "El Dorado, after centuries. The gifts of the golden man. The treasure of the sacred lake."

Out of the Indian legends of centuries ago, the wonder-tales of the Spaniards in the New World, the man with the cigar box explained, had come these strange bits of gold and precious stones. Modern enterprise is discovering the lost treasure of a South American superstition. The sacred lake of El Dorado, the water of Guatavita into which Andean tribes threw their riches to appease their gods, has been drained; here are some of its treasures.

Hartley Knowles, the man with the cigar box, is an English engineer who has made the excavations and has now brought some of the things to America. He says himself that they are all exceedingly valuable as antiques, and, intrinsically, as gold and gems. One of the Americans to whom Mr. Knowles has showed his treasures adds that the excavation of the sacred lake of the Andes brings with it a possibility that the excavator has apparently not thought of in discoveries as to the lives of prehistoric peoples and in civilization of prehistoric times.

The story that lured a modern Englishman to South America, and is interesting American collectors in South American discoveries, is the same story that four and a half centuries ago called the Spanish adventurers to conquest in the unknown western world. It is the story of El Dorado. It is a tale that most of us have heard long ago, and long ago forgotten. It is the legend of the holy lake.

Upon the original story of the sacred lakes of the Chibcha tribes in the northern part of South America innumerable myths have been built. The early tales themselves are well-nigh shrouded in mystery and somewhat obscured by legend. Yet the story of El Dorado has its historical foundation, and the tale of the sacred lake of Guatavita, or Guatabita, is accredited by historians today. Much of the wonder-tale of El Dorado as the Spaniards and their followers built it on the first substructure is probably untrue. But the story of the lake, so far as historians have been able to ascertain, is a bit of real history—the tale of a people and their sacrifices, the record of wealth thrown away in a religious ceremonial as an offering to the gods, the true story of an ancient superstition.

According to the legends told by travelers and the facts set down by historians, the Andean tribes of the Chibcha venerated the mountain lakes of their province, and into them threw their jewels. Great feasts and great fastings, the accessions of rulers, the celebration of a pilgrimage, the prayer for the tribe's good fortune—these were all accompanied by gifts of the gods; the gifts were thrown into the lake. Of these mountain lakes Guatavita was the largest and most important; here most of the feasts were held, the offerings made to the gods. And here excavators and engineers have gone from England with the latest dredges and engines and set up modern apparatus to drain the lake.

The lake is drained now as nearly dry as the excavators dare to make it. Quantities of pottery, gold and precious stones have been taken out. The excavations are still going on, and it is believed that the discoveries have only begun. Various attempts have been made, in the last four centuries, to find the treasure of Chibcha piety; this latest effort is proving successful.

"I should say that the gold and gems already taken from the lake bottom amount to about $20,000," said Mr. Knowles. "How much there is left I shouldn't dare to say. But I think that we are just reaching the most interesting part of our work and our discovery.

"I think that most of what we have taken out up to date is from the sides of the lake. We have not yet dug down to the bottom, and we don't know just how much more we have to dig before we reach it. But, according to the stories, the bottom of the lake is where the richest treasures are."

We have most of us heard in our childhood that the Spaniards of the sixteenth century dreamed of "El Dorado," the land of gold, and that they sought for it in strange and savage and ever hopeful ways among strange and savage peoples. We have read how the lust of gold seized the adventurers of Spain, and they pressed into the wilderness and found and conquered more and more land without ever finding the land of gold. But, as a matter of fact, the Spanish explorers did find El Dorado. Only El Dorado was not the land of gold; it was the golden man. And the treasure of the golden man's gift was not a treasure that could be found in the land; it lay at the bottom of a lake, and the Spaniards could not drain it. The story of the real El Dorado is the story of the religious festivals of the Chibchas.

The tribes of the Chibchas, according to recent historians, occupied the plateau region of the northeastern province of Colombia, and were among the richest, the most magnificent, and the most enlightened of South American tribes. In their wealth, their barbaric splendor, and their handicrafts, they ranked with the Aztecs of Mexico and the Incas of Peru. Their land was rich in emeralds. Gold they procured in great quantities from their immediate neighbors. Rich textiles and dyed cotton stuffs, as well as the feathers of beautiful birds, added to the wealth and their magnificence. Amber they obtained from their neighbors, and apparently from the other side of the world they procured in some unknown manner some quantity of jade.

Savage, uncontrolled in their indulgence of the arts of pleasure that they had cultivated even more eagerly than the arts of war, they were yet a thoroughly religious people. Their heirarchy of gods and goddesses had passed beyond the simple worship of the forces of nature and included definite deities with definite powers—deities to be propitiated. Occasionally they offered up human beings to their gods; often they sacrificed talking parrots to avert calamity. But for the most part they gave their possessions to their deities, and worshipped, with barbaric wealth of sacrifice, at the sacred lakes.

There were five of these lakes in the district that we now know as Colombia—Guatavita, Guasca, Siecha, Teusaca, and Uhaque; of the five, Guatavita was by far the most important, Ubaque being its nearest rival. The people made pilgrimages to all the lakes, but to Guatavita most of all, and with the richest gifts. And it was at the lake of Guatavita that the great ceremony of the Chibcha tribes took place—the installation of the chief. Guatavita was the most important center of the Chibchas, the religious "capital" of the tribe.

The chief who came to his kingdom with sacrifices to the holy water of the plateau was an absolute monarch, whose power rested largely on the assumption that he was semi-divine. No subject dared look his leader in the face, but in the royal presence turned aside or assumed a stooping attitude. No messenger might approach the chief without bearing a gift, not to win the royal favor, but merely to do homage to the royal state. Over every detail of his subjects' lives he ruled, and if a man of Guatavita wished to alter the style of his dress he must ask his leader's permission and receive the new garment from the royal hand. In his "South American Archaeology" T. Athol Joyce of the British Museum describes the state of the Zipa of Bogota: "His garments were of the finest cotton, his throne was of gold studded with emeralds, and he traveled in a litter hung with golden plates. His headdress was of gold, and a golden crescent ornamented his brow; nose and ear ornaments were of the same material, and also the breastplate he wore upon his chest."

For five years or more before a Chibcha chief became his people's ruler he must remain in seclusion, preparatory to the great ceremony of the lake. At the end of his rigorous period of probation—for it was also a period of stern self-denial—the chief's nose and ears were pierced for the ornaments of his rank, and he made golden offerings to the gods. Professor Joyce, who in his book describes the ceremonies of the sacred lake as historically attested facts, quotes from the history of the conquest and discovery of New Granada, by Juan Rodriguez Fresle, written in 1636:

"Not only was the ceremonial of Guatavita particularly elaborate, but it gave rise to the stories of El Dorado which so fired the imagination of the early conquerors and gave such an impetus to the exploration of the interior. According to Fresle, the population of the neighborhood repaired to the sacred lake of Guatavita clad in their finest ornaments of gold and feathers. Innumerable sacrificial fires were kindled on the banks, and the lake was encircled with a cloud of incense. The ruler-elect was divested of his garments, anointed with an adhesive earth, and powdered with gold dust. Attended by his four principal sub-chiefs he embarked upon a reed raft ornamented with gold dust and furnished with four braziers for incense; at his feet was piled a mound of gold and emeralds, and amid the shouts of the multitude and the sound of whistles and other instruments he proceeded to the middle of the lake. There he plunged into the waters and washed off the offerings of gold dust, and the gold and emeralds were thrown in at the same time, the four chiefs making offerings on their own account. The raft then returned and the proceedings terminated with the revelry and chicha drinking so dear to the heart of the Colombians."

The chief with his gold-dust coat was in reality "El Dorado," the golden man of Spanish legend and Indian history.

Splendid as were the ceremonies attending the consecration of the tribal chief at Guatavita, or Guatabita, as Professor Joyce calls it, the national pilgrimages and feasts were still more important. These pilgrimages were made periodically to all the chief lakes of the country. The northern Chibcha honored Guatavita almost exclusively, while the southern tribes paid their religious homage at Ubaque, south of Bogota.

While the chiefs and nobles were throwing their gold and jewels into the sacred waters, the common people were burying theirs by the side of the lake or in secret places not far removed from the holy waters. Many curious bits of pottery have been recovered from the neighborhood of the lake of Guatavita.

When Mr. Knowles came to America a short time ago he brought with him many of the treasures that he had taken from the sacred lake. Most of the pieces are small. Whatever may be their value as ancient pieces of handicraft, the emeralds are undoubtedly the richest "finds" in intrinsic worth.

M. de la Kier of the Royal Institute of Paris is quoted as estimating the probable value of the articles in the lake at several million English pounds. But such estimates are, of course, guesses. The bottom of the lake has not yet been reached, and is still in a semi-liquid muddy state. It is believed that the articles taken out to date were thrown or buried in the sides of the lake and have been, in the ages since, carried toward the center by the pressure of the mud. The number of pottery vessels found seems to substantiate this view.

The work done by Mr. Knowles' company—which is incorporated in London under the name of "Contractors, Limited"—is but the final link in a long chain of explorations that stretches from the times of the Spaniards down to the present day.

In 1562 Antonio de Sepulveda of Santa Fe de Bogota lowered the waters of the lake to fifteen feet, or thereabout, and is said to have taken out great quantities of gold and an emerald of rare beauty. Sepulveda had made his attempt by digging a trench, and before the work could be finished the sides of the trench caved in, and the waters began to rise again. During the three centuries that followed several attempts to drain the lake, always by means of trenches cut from above, were made and failed.

In 1897 a small company of native engineers was formed and three years later sold out its rights to Hartley Knowles and his company.

"I had read about the legends of the golden man," said Mr. Knowles, who stands sponsor for the foregoing history of the attempts to drain the lake, "and, being an engineer, I thought I should like to have a try. I have been working at it for twelve years. The lake is drained as dry as I want it; if it is completely drained the mud at the bottom may solidify, and we do not want that. What we are after now is to dig down to what was the bottom of the lake 450 years ago. The present bottom is, of course, a sediment of years. The lake is cup-shaped. It is about 10,000 feet above sea level in the Colombian Andes. It took four years to drain the lake. Now we are excavating.

"The government of Colombia has been most kind in letting us make the excavations and take out the things. Of course the interest that attaches to the treasure is for aniquarians, museums and collectors."

DANGER IN TOO MUCH REST

Lack of Muscular Exercise, Caused by Lying in Bed, May Result in Death.

Lack of muscular exercise is the first result of lying in bed. As a result the appetite is weakened, the digestive action slows down and the muscles of the stomach and abdomen cease to act upon the intestinal mass. When the body is in a recumbent position the heart works with the least expenditure of efforts and the least fatigue, and the circulation and the functional activity are decreased.

But unless the subject is exceptionally vigorous all the benefits are counterbalanced by dangers. In bed, the subject is shut away from fresh air and sunlight. The result of that deprivation is a condition similar to anemia. But the supreme menace to the week or the aged confined to bed is the clogging of the pulmonary circulation, an action which frequently results in passive congestion of both sides of the lungs. For this reason the simple fracture of a bone may be the cause of death, because when the patient lies in bed there is no movement of the muscles to act as an incentive to deep breathing.—Harper's Weekly.

Playing Heathen.

An exchange says: "A new game called 'Christianity' is being played in certain parts of the city. The girls get on one side and are the Christians. The boys get on the other side and are the heathens. Then the heathens embrace 'Christianity." So far as our knowledge runs, the game has not yet been introduced into Clarendon society circles. However, we are willing to vouch for the welcome it receives among the heathens, whenever it does come.—Dimmit Plainsman.

WOMAN'S REALM

NEW EVENING FABRICS

FASHION'S LAST WORDS AS TO CLINGING MATERIALS.

Apparel Must Be Light, Beaded Nets Being the Heaviest of All Wear That Has the Approval of the Designers.

Qualities of rich material, softly draped and wound around the figure, compose the new evening gowns, which are exquisitely lovely—and the despair of the amateur dressmaker. Almost any woman with a knack for sewing could cut and hang one of the short-waisted Directoire gowns which have been in vogue during the past two seasons, and it was not a difficult matter to add a soft, dragging little train—round or pointed. But the new costume, combining satin, brocade, fur, metallic net or chiffon, and much lace, is another thing entirely, and skillful hands are required to concoct from all these contrasting stuffs a gown that shall combine exquisite simplicity of line and the perfect grace that hides, yet reveals the figure beneath.

Fortunately, the new evening fabrics are exceedingly soft and clinging, and even a gown of velvet brocade draped over a petticoat of satin, does not weigh more than a half dozen pounds, while the lace and satin dancing gowns may be measured in weight by ounces. The beaded nets are the heaviest of all the new evening fabrics and the bead fringes add appreciably to the weight of the chiffon and lace tunic, but there is a wonderful lightness and ethereal charm about most of the evening costumes of the season.

Sometimes lace flounces and draperies are used over colored silk or satin, the favorite shades for these "show-through" effects being the new yellow and pinkish red tones like saffron, apricot, pale coral and geranium. All the yellow tones in demand for evening wear—especially a very brilliant orange-yellow, called "burnt onion." Black Chantilly lace is used lavishly over white charmeuse and satin meteor. Usually a red rose or broad bands of black velvet ribbon imparts the distinctive note to these lace-veiled costumes in black and white.

Narrow band trimmings of fur are used on chiffons, and even laces and sometimes a band of fur serves as a shoulder strap, instead of the more familiar band of rhinestones or pearls.

Some frocks that depend for their attractiveness upon simplicity and perfection of line are trimmed solely with a narrow fur edging on the tunic.

Sleeves on most of the new evening gowns are so tiny that they are barely worth the name, though the arm and shoulder are in some cases veiled with thin net.

Swansdown is used on dancing frocks for debutantes, and when combined with white chiffon, lace, pearls, or tiny silk floral festoons, is exquisitely dainty and girlish.

OLD STYLE FAVORED AGAIN

Pins and Combs of Tortoise Shell Are to Be Used as Head Ornaments This Season.

Back into the realm of hair ornaments have come the pins and combs of tortoise shell that typified the hairdressing of our grandmothers, and is traceable to the time of the Medicis.

If you have some treasured heirlooms that are large, carved or inlaid, bring them out into the light of modern day and place them in the coils and waves of your hair. You then can smile at the world.

Fillets of tortoise shell rival the high combs, and the disks that suggest the Holland headdress, or perhaps the ornaments of the middle ages, have returned.

The empire comb, with its spreading lines that resemble the peacock's tail, is an important arrival. The hair is drawn up in a series of curls at the back of the neck, the high comb mounting above them. Generally the hair is parted in front or at the side.

The band, or fillet, is passed over the brow, the hair waved and worn in graceful lines low over the temples and ears. Disks are worn if this style hairdressing is carried out.

Coils of hair are held in place by ball tortoise-shell pins, and the bars of shell to catch the stray curls and to support the hair have again come into their own.

Since the coiffure of the moment is conservatively simple, there is ample room for adding decoration by way of ornaments, and makers are offering many attractive styles to convince women of the change.

CREEPING APRON FOR BABY

Saves the Clothes and Does Away With Much Laborious Work in the Laundry.

Creeping aprons save the baby's clothes. They are made in a straight piece, long enough to enclose the skirts like a bag, with an elastic at each end to fasten around the waist.

Children with a family history of consumption should sleep in the open air and live in it as much as possible. Their food should contain a larger proportion of fat than is common—cream, butter, milk, fresh eggs, etc.

Families who live in large cities find it difficult to keep their children contented in their own yard; they seem to want to go into the other boy's or girl's yard to play. By providing some interesting occupation for the child to do in his own home or yard it will soon become more attractive and his desire to find amusement in the company of other children will grow less and less.

Novelties for the Winter.

Various forms of "suitings," in red materials, are novelties this year for coats and skirts, and they are produced in very exclusive shadings. But, unfortunately, most of the chic materials of this description are, like ratines, so very expensive; they are manufactured with such a soft, velvety finish that the rough effect is entirely subdued. Still, for real hard wear, it is useless to economize in fabric; besides we ought not to grudge paying for the wonderful new colorings which are imparted to these wonderful cloths. Mole, brown, red, purple and shot-gray effects, with a preponderating presence of mid-Victorian magneto tones are all leading colors this season.

Fur Collarettes.

The new fur collarettes, consisting of straight strips of fur, such as ermine, sable, skunk or a squirrel-imitating chinchilla, with a stiff bow of black moire ribbon and a plaited tongue of old lace, are excellent compromises between the tulle ruffle or feather boa of warmer days, and the heavy fur stole so full of comfort in the winter.

ALL CANNOT WEAR YELLOW

But Those Who Can Will Find It a Charming and Most Becoming Color.

If your hair is dark and your skin a warm, clear olive or a creamy white, you will find that yellow suits you; but if your skin is sallow, or in any way sickly looking you must shun yellow as the plague.

Auburn haired girls, so long as there is not too much pink in their cheeks, look delightful in nearly every shade of yellow; but the girl with what I call "ordinary brown" hair—that is, hair with no strong tints of gold or red or bronze—will be unwise if she admits more than the tiniest touch of this color into her toilet.

And now for the tints we may wear with yellow. A pretty safe rule is always to combine it with some darker color. There are some very pale primrose shades that tone exquisitely with faint mauves, and even greens, but these you will see principally in evening frocks.

Dark blues and very deep greens make a good background for yellow, and black and dark brown are best of all.

In two of J. M. Barrie's most fascinating books—"When a Man's Single" and "Sentimental Tommy"—you will find that he has chosen yellow and brown for the frocks of his sweetest girls, so I don't think there is much fear that our brothers and husbands will grumble at the new fashion, provided always that we turn it to really pretty account, and do not let it become our master instead of our slave.

French Scent.

A rose perfume that is not musty, but that carries in itself all the freshness of the garden, is novel and delightful. This is a French scent, and though it is of fair price, it is so fragrant of the very basketfuls of blossoms which it must contain that it is refreshing as well as pleasant. It is named for the red roses, and conjures up a picture of the new buds, which resemble the bride roses in size and are of reddest hue. It has an elusive daintiness about it which at once marks it for the lady's use.

LOOK AFTER YOUR HEALTH

If Your System Is Kept Toned Up You Will Escape Many Diseases That Find Easy Victims Among Pale People.

Enough disease germs enter the average human body every day to cause death if the healthful organism did not combat these germs and render them harmless.

Let the human system become run down, or debilitated, and this power of resistance to disease is weakened. Soon the disease germs get the upper hand, an acute sickness follows or the patient becomes a chronic invalid.

It is in the blood that the battle to maintain the health is fought. Keep the blood toned up, the bowels open and observe ordinary care as regards food and rest and you will avoid much sickness.

Debility is not a recognized disease but is a condition in which the sufferer cannot get a good night's sleep, wakes up all tired out, has no strength or ambition, is nervous, has a poor appetite, has trouble with the stomach, and is subject to headaches and backaches. It is most commonly met with in people who have to work hard, are confined indoors, eat improper food or have worries and grief.

The case of Mrs. M. V. McCaslin, of No. 202 South 27th Street, Lincoln, Neb., shows the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a tonic for all run-down conditions of health. She says:

"I gave Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People a trial for general debility from which I had been suffering about three years. I was thoroughly tired and worn out and had no ambition for anything. I became very weak and kept losing strength. My appetite was poor and I was nervous and had severe headaches.

"I needed a tonic treatment and tried several tonic remedies but none seemed to help me until I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I was soon much improved in health and able to get around and do my work. I took the pills until cured and am pleased to recommend them to anyone who is run down in health."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are for sale by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50 by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

A DOCTOR'S SLEEP

Found He Had to Leave Off Coffee.

Many persons do not realize that a bad stomach will cause insomnia.

Coffee and tea drinking being such an ancient and respectable form of habit, few realize that the drug—caffeine—contained in coffee and tea, is one of the principal causes of dyspepsia and nervous troubles.

Without their usual portion of coffee or tea, the caffeine topers are nervous, irritable and fretful. That's the way with a whisky drinker. He has got to have his dram "to settle his nerves"—habit.

To leave off coffee or tea is an easy matter if you want to try it, because Postum gives a gentle but natural support to the nerves and does not contain any drug—nothing but food.

Physicians know this to be true, as one from Ga. writes:

"I have cured myself of a long-standing case of Nervous Dyspepsia by leaving off coffee and using Postum," says the doctor.

"I also enjoy refreshing sleep, to which I've been an utter stranger for 20 years.

"In treating dyspepsia in its various types, I find little trouble when I can induce patients to quit coffee and adopt Postum."

The Dr. is right and "there's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavour is always uniform. Sold by grocers—50-cup tin 30 cts., 100-cup tin 50 cts.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2-cent stamp for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.—Adv.

Saturday, December 7, 1912.

A little rush of legal advertising made the Spectator late in getting before our readers this week.

Some of the standpat papers are bemoaning the fact that thirty-one members elect of the legislature met in caucus the other night and decided to stand by Henry Rines for speaker. The Wadena Journal even goes so far as to say that "trouble is brewing" for these thirty-one members. For the love of Pete, fellers, hasn't there been enough of other kinds of "brewing" in the organization of past legislatures so that you can let these boys organize once without trying to bluff them out.—News-Press

Council Proceedings

Regular meeting of the village council of the village of St. Hilaire held Dec. 2, 1912.

Meeting called to order by President J. C. Dahl. All members present.

Minutes of last regular and last special meetings of the village council read and approved.

On motion duly made and carried the following bills were allowed:

I. D. Converse, publishing proceedings, etc.	9.55

The clerk reported one bid on hand for the purchase of the $4,000 bonds. C. L. Hanson of Thief River Falls offers to take the bonds for a premium of fifty dollars.

On motion duly made and carried the bid of C. L. Hanson was accepted.

On motion duly made and carried the president and secretary were authorized to sign the bond coupons.

On motion duly made and carried meeting adjourned.

J. C. DAHL, Pres.
DR. C. SWANSON, Clerk.

The Lowly Singer.

The humble poet goes about
In very modest raiment.
If he could coin his tuneful words
He'd gladly make a payment
On rags that glisten as the sun
And raise an awful holler,
But now he has to be content—
He hasn't got a dollar.

For him the sun unfolds its light,
For him the stars are gleaming,
And so he cannot waste his time
On profit bearing scheming.
He must remain content to get
The robin's morning greeting
And not disturb his high flown thoughts
With vulgar things like eating.

Were he disposed to drop a peg
And lower his profession
Things might be drifting round his way
In quite a long procession.
Would he write ads, instead of songs
Extolling pills or bacon
He'd rake in coin; but, oh, his art
Would have to be forsaken!

No; he will go along his way,
Wrapped in his inspiration.
Let sordid poets sing of soap;
His theme is all creation.
So take him gently by the hand
And lead him to the table,
And then the poet's appetite
You'll find was but a fable.

His Dreadful Price.

"I have just had some swell photographs taken."

"I hope that they do you justice."

"Thanks, awfully, but that's not what's troubling me."

"What is?"

"How I am ever going to do the photographer justice?"

An Oversight.

"The constitution is a grand old document."

"Yes, but they wrote it too soon."

"Why so?"

"They should have waited until automobiles had been invented and made it unconstitutional to run a fellow down."

The Measure of a Woman's Wit.

There are three ways by which a woman's brain
Can well be measured. One is by the fit
Of boot or shoe. A size that gives her pain
Proves her deficient in the thing called wit.

A waist so girded that its span appears
A wasplike structure shows her stupid grits.
But when her head must put on sundry rats
To wear her hat—all sense has taken flight.
—L. S. Waterhouse in New York Life.

The Real Advantage.

John Bright used to tell how a barber who was cutting his hair once said to him: "You 'ave a large 'ead, sir. It is a good thing to 'ave a large 'ead, for a large 'ead means a large brain, and a large brain is the most useful thing a man can 'ave, as 'it keeps the roots of the 'air."—Sacred Heart Review.

Explicit.

The Kedah postoffice authorities have a somewhat blunt way of putting things. Copies of a Penang paper posted to a subscriber were the other day returned marked, "Addressee hanged for murder."—Bangkok Times.

Breaking It Gently.

Captain of Steamer—Madam, it gives me great pain to be obliged to tell you that your little boy's hat has blown overboard. Fond Mother—Why, I thought it was tied on with a string! Captain—Yes. That was just the trouble. The string did not break.

Arming Safes with Deadly Gases.

A chemical company has devised a grenade or glass receptacle, filled with a chemical compound, as a means of making it impossible for safeblowers to rob a safe after breaking it open.

It is an inoffensive-looking article, about two inches in diameter and five inches long. Inside of the exterior tube are seven smaller ones, each filled with a different chemical. When the door of the safe is blown, or the safe is jarred heavily, the grenade explodes, and the air is filled with the deadly fumes. It is claimed that these fumes, which, so far as effect is concerned, are not unlike the gases from the deadly Chinese "stink pots," are powerful enough to make breathing impossible and to force all persons near the safe to retreat or be almost instantly suffocated.

The grenades are made with a lasting effect of from six to ten hours, depending upon the size, and are placed just back of the locking mechanism of the safe doors.—Popular Mechanics.

Hadley Points Out Danger.

President Hadley of Yale writes: "In the year 1789 the whole French people was in a state of political excitement. They seized eagerly upon everything sensational. A young journalist named Camille Desmoulins shared this feeling and took advantage of it. He wrote a series of articles called 'Lamp Post Talks to the People of Paris,' in which he urged that anybody who was not a friend of the people ought to be taken to the nearest lamp post and hanged. He was not himself a bloodthirsty man. He chose his title chiefly because it sounded so picturesque. After a time he saw that they were executing a great many innocent men and women, and began to tell men so. Then they said that he was not a friend of the people any longer, and hanged him. This story has a moral for us in America to-day. It shows the dangers that come to a people which reads newspapers for the sake of excitement, instead of for the sake of information.

"To What Base Uses."

Big Brother (to young sister who has acquired an unaccountable habit of borrowing his razor)—I know you have borrowed my razor again. It's not where I put it.

Young Sister (scrambling around in the bathroom)—Oh! here it is, Bob—just where you left it, I am sure!

Big Brother—No such thing. And this is the third time you have misplaced it. Now, miss, you will tell me what you use it for. Were you ripping the sleeves of your last winter's coat?

Young Sister (doggedly)—No. You never will forget that!

Big Brother—Well, what then? (shaking her by the shoulders) Answer me.

Young Sister (tearfully)—I was just splitting up a little light wood to kindle the fire, and I just think you are a horrid, selfish old thing not to want to even lend your things—so there!

HAT BROKE UP THE CONCERT.

Remarkable Headgear Responsible for Spoiling Performance.

A story has reached this country of a hat which spoiled an afternoon performance at a small French playhouse. It appears that in the absence of an orchestra a lady presided over the piano. She was neither young, pretty nor talented, and not wishing to pass unnoticed conceived the idea of wearing a hat that would attract the attention of the audience.

In this she was successful. The hat looked like a good-sized umbrella covered with flowers, ribbons and birds. As the lady took her seat the surprise it caused hushed the audience into silence; when, however, the pianist struck the first notes and the flowers, ribbons and birds began a mad dance, the storm broke loose and the laughter at last grew so terrific that the curtain was lowered to give the spectators an opportunity of regaining their composure. They never regained it, the performance was spoiled and the authors are suing the director for damages.—Millinery Trade Review.

RABBITS ARE HARD FIGHTERS.

The Charge of Cowardice a Slander—Defeat of a Ferret.

Tell a man that he hasn't the pluck of a rabbit and if he doesn't disprove it by hitting you he is certain at any rate to be extremely annoyed.

Yet the taunt is a libel on the rabbit. A doe rabbit will fight like fury in defense of her young. She will charge like a battering ram and use those long sharp incisors of hers to capital purpose.

An old buck rabbit is not to be lightly tackled by weasel, stoat or even ferret. On the sanded floor of a small public house near Chestnut a ferret of long experience was matched with an old lop-eared buck, the property of the landlord.

The ferret made straight for the rabbit's throat, but the latter was in the air before master ferret could reach him, and leaping clean over the ferret's head let out with those powerful hind legs of his a kick which hurled the ferret bodily against the wainscot. Twice the ferret returned to the attack and twice he missed his grip and went hurtling through the air.

The third repulse was enough for him. He knew he was beaten and could not be persuaded to stand up for a fourth round.—Pearson's Weekly.

Spring Pastimes.

When I peruse the seedman's book,
That handy guide,
And at the tempting pictures look,
Then I decide
To purchase hoe and spade and rake
And gleefully a garden make.

But when the poultry book I read,
See Wyandottes
And Plymouth Rocks of stately breed
In handsome lots,
I feel I really cannot sleep
Till I begin to chickens keep.
—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Shore Lots.

Cittyman—Oh, these are the shore lots you advertised? Well, there doesn't seem to be much to them.

Boomley—Say, you want to come up and have a look at them when the tide's out!—New York Life.

The Hen's Joke.

Said the barnyard goose, "Mrs. Hen, please tell
Why you laid an egg in the old dry well."
Said the wise old hen, "If you really must know,
I thought it time for me to 'lay low.'"
—Detroit Free Press.

High Class Suicide.

In China suicide has been a fine art for several centuries. If a mandarin is guilty of misconduct he is requested to put himself out of the land of the living. There is a distinction, too, in the manner in which the oriental may die. If he is of exalted rank and entitled to wear the peacock feather he is privileged to choke himself to death with gold leaf. This is regarded as a distinguished manner of ending life. If the mandarin is only of the rank that is entitled to wear the red button he must be content with strangling himself with a silken cord. Such are the distinctions of caste.

Financial Information.

"So you at last yielded to that man's importunities and gave him some tips on the market?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Dustin Stax.

"What happened?"

"Well, they turned out so badly that I'm mighty glad I didn't invest any money on 'em myself."—Washington Star.

Equally Ignorant.

The author of "Reminiscences of a Country Politician" once asked a laborer in an English village how old he was.

"I be just the same age as the queen," he said. "It be either a fortnight older or a fortnight younger. I don't rightly know which, and I don't suppose her knows either."

A Witty Forlornity.

A forlorn looking man said, "I've tried everything that I could turn my hand to, but couldn't make anything answer, and now I have decided to go up among the hills, where they say there's a wonderful echo, to see if I can make that answer."

What's in a Name.

Returned Traveler—By the way, Mr Mann, your daughter, Miss Etta, is married, isn't she? Old Resident—No; she could have married a fine young fellow once, but she threw him over on account of his name. She said it was bad enough to be Etta Mann but she drew the line at Etta Knox.—Chicago Tribune.

No Economy There.

Bronx—In Russia they never say, "What's in a name?" Lenox—Why not? Bronx—It's taken for granted that it's the whole alphabet.—Lippincott's.

Woodmen Out of New Rate

An official statement withdrawing the order for new insurance rates, as adopted by the head camp of the order in Chicago, was issued from the executive offices of the Modern Woodmen of America last Saturday.

The action was a sequel to a recent court decision in Springfield, Ill., enjoining enforcement of the new rates.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ninety dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due, and is due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by C. E. Carpenter and Ella A. Carpenter, his wife, and Geo. M. Bleecker and Mary F. Bleecker, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of St. Hilaire, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagees, bearing date the 10th day of June, 1910, and duly acknowledged by said mortgagors on June 27th, 1910, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Red Lake and state of Minnesota on the 30th day of June, 1910, at 5 o'clock p. m., in book 31 of mortgages on page 112.

Which said mortgage was after the organization and creation of Pennington county, Minnesota, duly transcribed into the records in the office of the register of deeds of said Pennington county, and recorded therein on the 23rd day of November, 1910, in book 22 of mortgages on page 332;

And Whereas, The said mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of fifteen hundred ninety and no-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum from the 10th day of June, 1912, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, towit: The south one-half of the southeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section two (2) in township one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-four (44) west of the fifth principal meridian, in Red Lake county, Minnesota, now a part of Pennington county, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington county, at the east front door of the court house in the city of Thief River Falls in Pennington county in said state on the 30th day of December, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of fifteen hundred ninety dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the p[illegible] ving the patrons a medium for [illegible] of ideas and information on f[illegible] department is neglected, bu[illegible] e is taken care of wi h the [illegible] ng the Blade worth many tim[illegible] of subscript on—one dollar a [illegible]

MONEY OF THE RICH.

Of More Use Foolishly Spent Than Hoarded or Lying Idle.

A great reservoir of water undistributed leaves men and women to perish of thirst and growing crops to parch and die. So also vaults bulging with stagnant money leave men and women to perish in abject poverty and ripened crops to rot within the fields and orchards that grew them. Therefore what happens to the dollars of the millionaire is a question of the first importance.

Those of us who believe in praying for material blessings will do well to pray long and earnestly that rich women will never cease to buy $100 hats and $1,000 gowns, with diamonds and other jewels to match; that they will continue to give balls and teas and entertainments of the most expensive kind; that they will be recklessly extravagant in gewgaws and folderols of every description, because it will be good for us who depend upon an income drawn from the multitude of operations involved in producing, merchandising and transporting all those gewgaws and other gimcracks that go to keep extravagance at a high pitch.

Let us hope that rich men's sons will continue to spend their fathers' money as foolishly as they are reputed to do—not because it will be good for them, but because it will be good to have the money poured into the wage earner's money channels.

Let us doubly hope that the rich men may be prospered in their money getting, because they will not let it lie idle. Whatever their wives and children do not spend they put into stocks and bonds and thereby turn it into the wage earner's money channels. Let us be thankful, too, that neither the dollars of the rich nor the dollars of the poor are of any value save as they go into the wage channels of active circulation.—F. W. Hewes in Harper's Weekly.

His Shrewd Idea.

"Who is that sour looking girl with the heavy underjaw?"

"That is the only daughter of old De Milyuns."

"And who is the dainty bit of sweetness with the blue eyes and golden hair?"

"That's the chaperon."

"What's the explanation?"

"Why, it's old De Milyun's clever idea. He thinks his Jane will be perfectly safe as long as Miss Blossom is around."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Gold In Barnato's Body.

A German paper is responsible for the announcement that Barney Barnato, still more than the legendary king of Peru, who was wont to have his body gilded afresh every morning, deserved the title of El Dorado—the "Man of Gold"—not because of his wealth or of his connection with gold mines, but because his system actually secreted gold. He was, says this credible authority, the victim of a disease called metallitis, his blood being permeated with a powdery gold, as were his eyes, nose, ears and all of his mucous membrane. The pain caused by this condition was so intolerable that it is believed to have been the cause of his suicide.

Lingering Superstitions.

"Will a lucky gentlewoman give an unlucky one a tiny mascot to bring luck?" runs an advertisement in an English paper. Here was a poor soul—for if there is a creature on the face of the earth whose fate calls for pity it is a gentlewoman who is down—keeping in her poverty some of that superstition or faith, whatever it may be called, which is the only thing that keeps misforune from crushing the sufferer. If only she could get the right charm she might induce fate to look kindly on her! People call this a practical age, but evidences of superstition continue to appear. A lawsuit not long ago revealed the fact that an astrologer kept a motorcar and had a fine house, etc., all of which came out of the proceeds of a zodiacal magazine.

As Exemplified.

Having given his order twenty minutes before and seeing no indications that his dinner was ready, the man with the sparse whiskers beckoned to a waiter.

"My friend," he said, "perhaps I have made a mistake. Is this a pay as you enter restaurant?"

"No, sir," responded the young man in the white apron, yawning. "This is a dinner cooked while you wait restaurant."

Thereupon he resumed his dreamy, contemplative attitude, and the man with the sparse whiskers waited some more.—Chicago Tribune.

A Reply to Gladstone.

"Gladstone had no great scientific knowledge," said an English writer, "and at a dinner, when Faraday described an important new scientific discovery, the premier showed indifference.

"'After all,' he said, hiding a yawn behind his hand, 'what use will it ever be?'

"'Why,' said Faraday, 'there's every probability, sir, that some day you'll be able to tax it.'"

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Parviance, Editor McNairny County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Baxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

SYNOPSIS.

George Percival Algernon Jones, vice-President of the Metropolitan Oriental Rug company of New York, thirsting for romance, is in Cairo on a business trip. Horace Ryanne arrives at the hotel in Cairo with a carefully guarded bundle. Ryanne sells Jones the famous holy Yhiordes rug which he admits having stolen from a pasha at Bagdad. Jones meets Major Callahan and later is introduced to Fortune Chedsoye by a woman to whom he had loaned 150 pounds at Monte Carlo some months previously, and who turns out to be Fortune's mother.

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

"Well?" said Mrs. Chedsoye, a quizzical smile slanting her lips.

"You wish my opinion?" countered the daughter. "He is shy, but he is neither stupid nor silly; and when he smiles he is really good-looking."

"My child," replied the woman, drawing off her gloves and examining her shapely hands, "I have looked into the very heart of that young man. A thousand years ago, a red-cross on his surtout, he would have been beating his fists against the walls of Jerusalem; five hundred years later, he would have been singing chants under lattice-windows; a paladin and a poet."

"How do you know that? Did he make love to you?"

"No. I made love to him without his knowing it; and that was more to my purpose than having him make love to me," enigmatically. "He is modest, and he was so guileless that he never asked my name. But in Monte Carlo, as you know, one asks only one's banker's name."

"And your purpose?"

"It is still mine, dear. Do you realize that we haven't seen each other in four months, and that you haven't offered to kiss me?"

"Did he go away without writing to you about that money?"

Mrs. Chedsoye calmly plucked out the inturned fingers of her gloves. "I believe I did receive a note inclosing his banker's address, but, unfortunately, in the confusion of returning to Paris I lost it. My memory has always been a trial to me," sadly.

"Since when?" coldly. "There is not a woman living with a keener memory than yours."

"You flatter me. In affairs that interest me, perhaps."

"You never meant to pay him. It is horrible."

"My dear Fortune, how you jump at conclusions! Did I not offer him a draft the very first thing?"

"Knowing that at such a moment he could not possibly accept it?" derisively. "Sometimes I hate you!"

"In these days filial devotion is a lost art."

"No, no; it is a flower parents have ceased to cultivate."

And there was in the tone a strained note which described an intense longing to be loved. For if George Percival Algernon Jones was a lonely young man, it was the result of his own blindness; whereas Fortune Chedsoye turned hither and thither in search of that which she never could find. The wide Lybian desert held upon its face a loneliness, a desolation, less mournful than that which reigned within her heart.

"Hush! We are growing sentimental," warned the mother. "Besides, I believe we are attracting attention." Her glance swept a half circle complacently.

"Pardon me! I should be sorry to draw attention to you, knowing how you abhor it."

"My child, learn from me; temper is the archenemy of smooth complexions. Jones—it makes you laugh."

"It is a homely, honest name."

"I grant that. But a Percival Algernon Jones!" Mrs. Chedsoye laughed softly. It was one of those pleasant sounds that caused persons within hearing to wait for it to occur again. "Come; let us go up to the room. It is a long, dusty journey in from Port Said."

Fortune was certain that for her mother her heart knew nothing but hate. Neglect, indifference, injustice, misunderstanding, the chill repellence that always met the least outpouring of the child's affections, the unaccountable disappearances, the terror of the unknown, the blank wall of ignorance behind which she was always kept, upon these hate had builded her dark and brooding retreat. Yet, never did the mother come within the radius of her sight that she did not fall under the spell of strange fascination, enchaining; fight against it how she might. A kindly touch of the hand, a single mother-smile, and she would have flung her arms about the other woman's neck.

But the touch and the mother-smile never came. She knew, she understood; she wasn't wanted, she hadn't been wanted in the beginning: to her mother she was as the young of animals, interesting only up to that time when they could stand alone. That the mother never made and held feminine friendships was in nowise astonishing. Beauty and charm, such as she possessed, served immediately to stimulate envy in other women's hearts. And that men of all stations in life flocked about her, why, it is the eternal tribute demanded of beauty. Here and there the men were not all the daughter might have wished. Often they burnt sweet flattery at her shrine, tentatively; but as she coolly stamped out these incipient fires, they at length came to regard her as one regards the beauty of a frosted window, as a thing to admire and praise in passing. One ache always abided: the bitter knowledge that had she met in kind smile for smile and jest for jest, she might have been her mother's boon companion. But deep back in some hidden chamber of her heart lay a secret dread of such a step, a dread which, whenever she strove to analyze it, ran from under her investigating touch, as little balls of quicksilver run from under the pressure of a thumb.

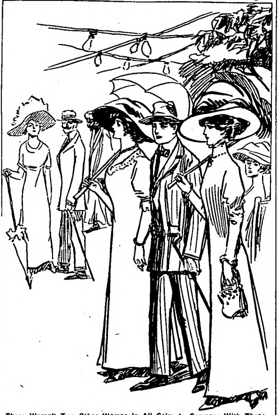
She was never without the comforts of life, well-fed, well-dressed, well-housed, and often her mother flung her some jeweled trinket which (again that sense of menace) she put away, but never wore. The bright periods were when they left her in the little villa near Mentone, with no one but her old and faithful nurse. There, with her horse, her books and her flowers, she was at peace. Week into week and month into month she was let be. Never a letter came, save from some former schoolmate who was coming over and wanted letters of introduction to dukes and duchesses. If she smiled over these letters it was with melancholy; for the dukes and duchesses, who fell within her singular orbit, were not the sort to whom one gave letters of introduction.

Where her mother went she never had the least idea. She might be in any of the great ports of the world, anywhere between New York and Port Said. The major generally disappeared at the same time. Then, perhaps, she'd come back from a pleasant tram-ride over to Nice and find them both at the villa, maid and luggage. Mayhap a night or two, and off they'd go again; never a word about their former journey, uncommunicative, rather quiet. These absences, together with the undemonstrative reappearances, used to hurt Fortune dreadfully. It gave her a clear proof of where she stood, exactly nowhere. The hurt had lessened with the years, and now she didn't care much. Like as not, they would drag her out of Eden for a month or two, for what true reason she never could quite fathom, unless it was that at times her mother liked to have the daughter near her as a foil.

At rare intervals she saw steel-eyed, grim-mouthed men wandering up and down before the gates of the Villa Fanny, but they never rang the bell, nor spoke to her when she passed them on the street. If she talked of these men, her mother and the major would exchange amused glances, nothing more.

If, rightly or wrongly, she hated her mother, she despised her uncle, who was ever bringing to the villa men of money, but of coarse fiber, ostensibly with the view of marrying her off. But Fortune had her dreams, and she was quite content to wait.

There was one man more persistent than the others. Her mother called him Horace, which the major mellowed into Hoddy. He was tall, blond, good-looking, a devil-may-care, educated, witty, amusing; and in evening dress he appeared to be what it was quite evident he had once been, a gentleman. At first she thought it strange that he should make her, instead of her mother, his confidante. As to what vocation he pursued, she did not know, for he kept sedulous guard over his tongue; but his past, up to that fork in the road where manhood says good-by to youth, was hers. And in this direction, clever and artful as the mother was, she sought in vain to wrest this past from her daughter's lips. To the mother, it was really necessary for her to know who this man really was, had been, knowing thoroughly as she did what he was now.



There Weren't Two Other Women in All Cairo to Compare With These Two.

Persistent he undeniably was, but never coarse nor rude. Since that time he had come back from the casino at Monte Carlo, much the worse for wine, she feared him; yet, in spite of this fear, she had for him a vague liking, a hazy admiration. Whatever his faults might be, she stood witness to his great physical strength and courage. He was the only man, among all those who appeared at the Villa Fanny and immediately vanished, who returned again. And he, too, soon grew to be a part of this unreal drama, arriving mysteriously one day and departing the next.

That a drama was being enacted under her eyes she no longer doubted; but it was as though she had taken her seat among the audience in the middle of the second act. She could make neither head nor tail to it.

Whenever she accompanied her mother upon these impromptu journeys, her character, or rather her attitude, underwent a change. She swept aside her dreams; she accepted the world as it was, saw things as they were; laughed, but without merriment; jested, but with the venomed point. It was the reverse of her real character to give hurt to any living thing, but during these forced marches, as the major humorously termed them, and such they were in truth, she could no more stand against giving the cruel stab than, when alone in her garden, she could resist the tender pleasure of succoring a fallen butterfly. She was especially happy in finding weak spots in her mother's armor, and she never denied herself the thrust. Mrs. Chedsoye enjoyed these sharp encounters, for it must be added that she gave as good as she took, and more often than not her thrusts bit deeper and did not always heal.

Fortune never asked questions relative to the family finances. If she harbored any doubts as to their origin, to the source of their comparative luxury, she never put these into speech.

She had never seen her father, but she had often heard him referred to as "that brute' or "that fool" or "that drunken imbecile." If a portrait of him existed, Fortune had not yet seen it. She visited his lonely grave once a year, in the Protestant cemetery, and dreamily tried to conjure up what manner of man he had been. One day she plied her old Italian nurse with questions.

"Handsome? Yes, but it was all so long ago, cara mia, that I can not describe him to you."

"Did he drink?" Behind this question there was no sense of moral obloquy as applying to the dead.

"Sainted Mary! didn't all men drink their very souls into purgatory those unreligious days?"

"Had he any relatives?"

"I never heard of any."

"Was he rich?"

"No; but when the signora, your mother, married him she thought he was."

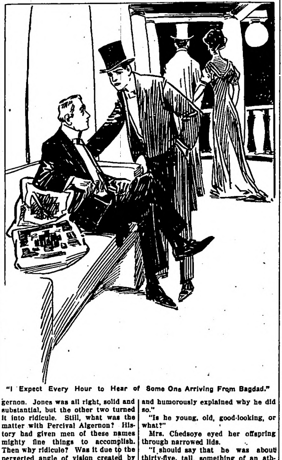
It was not till later years that Fortune grasped the true significance of this statement. It illumined many pages. She dropped all investigations, concluding wisely that her mother, if she were minded to speak at all, could supply only the incidents, the details.

It was warm, balmy, like May in the northern latitudes. Women wore white dresses and carried sunshades over their shoulders. A good band played airs from the new light-operas, and at one side of the grand-stand were tea-tables under dazzling linen. Fashion was out. Not all her votaries enjoyed polo, but it was absolutely necessary to pretend that they did. When they talked they discussed the Spanish dancer who paraded back and forth across the tea-lawn. They discussed her jewels, her clothes, her escort, and quite frankly her morals, which of the four was by all odds the most popular theme. All agreed that she was handsome in a bold way. This modification invariably distinguishes the right sort of women from the wrong sort, from which there is no appeal to a higher court. They could well afford to admit of her beauty, since the dancer was outside what is called the social pale, for all that her newest escort was a prince incognito. They also discussed the play at bridge, the dullness of this particular season, the possibility of war between England and Germany. And some one asked others who were the two well-gowned women down in front, sitting on either side of the young chap in pearl-grey. No one knew. Mother and daughter, probably. Anyhow, they knew something about good clothes.

George was happy. He was proud, too. He saw the glances, the nods of approval. He basked in a kind of sunshine that was new. What an ass he had been all his life! To have been afraid of women just because he was Percival Algernon! What he should have done was to have gone forth boldly, taken what pleasures he found, and laughed with the rest of them.

There weren't two other women in all Cairo to compare with these two. The mother, shapely, elegant, with the dark beauty of a high-class Spaniard, possessing humor, trenchant comment, keen deduction and application; worldly, cynical, high-bred. The student of nations might have tried in vain to place her. She spoke the French of the Parisians, the Italian of the Florentines, the German of the Hanoverians, and her English was the envy of Americans and the wonder of the Londoners. The daughter fell behind her but little, but she was more reserved.

As Fortune sat beside the young collector that afternoon, she marveled why they had given him Percival Algernon. Jones was all right, solid and substantial, but the other two turned it into ridicule. Still, what was the matter with Percival Algernon? History had given men of these names mighty fine things to accomplish. Then why ridicule? Was it due to the perverted angle of vision created by wits and humorists in the comic weeklies, who were eternally pillorying these unhappy prefixes to ordinary cognomens? And why this pillorying? She hadn't studied the subject sufficiently to realize that the business of the humorist is not so much to amuse as to warn persons against becoming ridiculous. And Percival Algernon Jones was all of that. It resolved itself into a matter of values, then. Had his surname been Montmorency, Percival Algernon would have fitted as a key to its lock. She smiled. No one but a fond mother would be guilty of such a crime. And if she ever grew to know him well enough, she was going to ask him all about this mother.



"I Expect Every Hour to Hear of Some One Arriving From Bagdad."

What interest had her own mother in this harmless young man? Oh, some day she would burst through this web, this jungle; some day she would see beyond the second act! What then? she never troubled to ask herself; time enough when the moment arrived.

"I had an interesting adventure last night, a most interesting one," began George, who was no longer the shy, blundering recluse. They were on the way back to town.

"Tell it me," said Mrs. Chedsoye.

He leaned over from his seat beside the chauffeur of the hired automobile. (Hang the expense on a day like this!) "A fellow brought me a rug last night, one of the rarest outside the museums. How and where he got it I'm not fully able to state. But he had been in a violent struggle somewhere, arms slashed, shins battered. He admitted that he had gone in where many shapes of death lurked. It was a bit irregular. I bought the rug, however. Some one else would have snatched it up if I hadn't. I wanted him to recount the adventure, but he smiled and refused. I tell you what it is, these eastern ports are great places."

"How interesting!" Mrs. Chedsoye's color was not up to the mark. "He was not seriously wounded?"

"Oh, no. He looks like a tough individual. I mean, a chap strong and hardy enough to pull himself out of pretty bad holes. He needed the money."

"Did he give his name?" asked Fortune.

"Yes; but no doubt it was assumed. Ryanne, and he spelt it with an 'ne,' and humorously explained why he did so."

"Is he young, old, good-looking, or what?"

Mrs. Chedsoye eyed her offspring through narrowed lids.

"I should say that he was about thirty-five, tall, something of an athlete; and there remains some indications that in the flush of youth he was handsome. Odd. He reminded me of a young man who was on the varsity eleven—foot-baller—when I entered my freshman year. I didn't know him, but I was a great admirer of his from the grand-stand. Horace Wadsworth was his name."

Horace Wadsworth. Fortune had the sensation of being astonished at something she had expected to happen.

Just before going down to dinner that night, Fortune turned to her mother, her chin combative in its angle.

"I gave Mr. Jones a hundred and fifty pounds out of that money you left in my care. Knowing how forgetful you are, I took the liberty of attending to the affair myself."

She expected a storm, but instead her mother viewed her with appraising eyes. Suddenly she laughed mellowly. Her sense of humor was too excitable to resist so delectable a situation.

"You told him, of course, that the money came from me?" demanded Mrs. Chedsoye, when she could control her voice.

"Surely, since it did come from you."

"My dear, my dear, you are to me like the song in the Mikado;" and she hummed lightly—

> "'To make the prisoner pent
> Unwillingly represent
> A source of innocent merriment,
> Of innocent merriment!'"

"Am I a prisoner, then?"

"Whatever you like; it can not be said that I ever held you on the leash," taking a final look into the mirror.

"What is the meaning of this rug? You and I know who stole it."

"I have explicitly warned you, my child, never to meddle with affairs that do not concern you."

"Indirectly, some of yours do. You are in love with Ryanne, as he calls himself."

"My dear, you do not usually stoop to such vulgarity. And are you certain that he has any other name?"

"If I were I should not tell you."

"Oh!"

"A man will tell the woman he loves many things he will not tell the woman he admires."

"As wise as the serpent," bantered the mother; but she looked again into the mirror to see if her color was still what it should be. "And whom does he admire?" the Mona Lisa smile hovering at the corners of her lips.

"You," evenly.

Mrs. Chedsoye thought for a moment, thought deeply and with new insight. It was no longer a child but a woman, and mayhap she had played upon the taut strings of the young heart once too often. Still, she was unafraid.

"And whom does he love?"

"Me. Shall I get you the rouge, mother?"

Still with that unchanging smile, the woman received the stab. "My daughter," as if speculatively, "you will get on. You haven't been my pupil all these years for nothing. Let us go down to dinner."

Fortune, as she silently followed, experienced a sense of disconcertion rather than of elation.

CHAPTER VI.

Moonlight and Poetry.

A ball followed dinner that night, Wednesday. The ample lounging-room filled up rapidly after coffee; officers in smart uniforms and spurs, whose principal function in times of peace is to get in everybody's way, rowel exposed ankles, and demolish lace ruffles. Egyptians and Turks and sleek Armenians in somber western frock and scarlet eastern fez or tarboosh, women of all colors (meaning, as course, as applied) and shapes and tastes, the lean and the fat, the tall and short, such as Billy Taylor is said to have kissed in all the ports, and tail-coats of as many styles as Joseph's had patches. George could distinguish his compatriots by the fit of the trousers round the instep; the Englishman had his fitted at the waist and trusted in Providence for the hang of the rest. This trifling detective work rather pleased George. The women, however, were all Eves to his eye; liberal expanses of beautiful white skin, the bare effect being modified by a string of pearls or diamonds or emeralds, and hair which might or might not have been wholly their own. He waited restlessly for the reappearance of Mrs. Chedsoye and her daughter. All was right with the world, except that he was to sail altogether too soon. His loan had been returned, and he knew that his former suspicions had been most unworthy. Mrs. Chedsoye had never received his note.

Fear to Display Emotion

Mistaken Sense of What Is Dignified Is a Common Fault of the Times.

This is not an age in which clear distinctions are made in the meaning of terms. Grotesque errors arise through haphazard conclusions drawn from this loose method of reasoning. One of the popular misconceptions is that the display of emotion on the part of men is belittling and indicates a weakness of character, disgraceful and shaming to the victim, says a writer in the Pittsburg Gazette Times. It is claimed by some that the natural processes of materialism and the hardening of men's natures by the struggle for success that the age demands has brought about this contempt for anything like a display of emotion on the part of men. It may be questioned, however, whether this explains the assumed respect for callousness that is so marked a feature of the times. There is a false idea around as to what emotion is, and a mistaken conception as to its proper expression. Hysteria is one of our national diseases. The excesses into which it leads men and women have become the subject of widespread contempt, sensible people, feeling an instinctive aversion for this sort of exaggerated feeling, have fallen into the error of mistaking sane, human emotion for hysteria and have gone to the extreme in their effort to avoid any expression of feeling as "womanish," puerile and unmanly.

A Forced Confession.

"Pshaw! Here's the rain coming down again and somebody's stolen my umbrella."

"Somebody's stolen what?"

"Well, the umbrella I've been carrying for the last week or so."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Poor Method of Education.

A smattering of many things is probably the worst and most barren way of educating children that the perverted wit of man could devise.

Dependent on Wood Pulp.

Mr. Frank Lloyd, at the annual dinner of the British Wood Pulp association, spoke of the serious effect upon the industry of the drought in Scandinavia, and, referring to the rapid development of the industry, pointed out how dependent paper makers now were upon wood pulp. If they had to rely on straw, etc., as was the case only about twenty-five years ago, his mill at Sittingbourne "would alone require a string of carts over four miles long, and at least 40,000,000 gallons of water every twenty-four hours."

How He Fixed the Date.

The lawyer was determined to discredit the witness.

"You are positive this happened on Wednesday?" he demanded.

"I am."

"Can't be mistaken?"

"No."

"Why couldn't it have been Thursday or Tuesday? How is it that you can fix this day so positively in your mind?"

"Because," answered the witness with some spirit, "we had chicken that day. Chicken day is Wednesday where I board."

Sometimes It's Himself.

When a man wears a flower in his buttonhole it indicates some woman is proud of him.—Atchison Globe.

Unexpected.

The visitor from beyond the suburbs had patronized the tobacco store and was about to take his first street car ride.

"Gosh!" he exclaimed, as the conductor, after taking his nickel, handed him a transfer, "do they give kewpons when a feller rides on the cars, too?"

Great Convenience.

"You find that an automobile helps you to keep your engagement?" "It does better than that," replied Mrs. Chuggins. "If you don't want to keep them, it enables you to explain everything by saying you broke down."

A New Experience.

"You can't blame the Balkan allies for feeling elated."

"No?"

"Think how it must gladden their hearts to trample on the fez while the wily Turk speeds on before."

Prefers Them Old.

A Wood street business man dropped in upon a Smithfield street business man.

"I see you don't object to hiring old men?"

"No," said the Smithfield street man. "Why should I?"

"Some employers seem to think that old men wouldn't do for business these days."

"Why not?"

"Pace too fast, I guess."

"Well, I don't know about that. When they get too old to be interested in canoes, or mandolins, or fancy waistcoats, or horse races, I find 'em pretty good for work."

Sleeping Car Tragedy.

"Say, mister," said the man in the upper berth to the occupant in the lower, "quit that music, will you? What do you think this is, a concert hall? The rest of us want to sleep."

"Why, the car is so stuffy," said the warbler, "I was only humming a little air—"

It was then that he was hit with a Pullman pillow, remaining unconscious for seven hours.—Harper's Weekly.

Repartee.

A perspicacious young man, passing where an old colored man was busy setting fire to the dead grass in a meadow, accosted him thus:

"Don't do that, Uncle Eb, don't do that!"

"Why so, sah, why so?"

"You will make that meadow as black as you are."

"Never mind dat, sah, never mind dat! Dat grass will all grow out an' be as green as you is!"—Judge.

Concrete an Old Story.

Rome was not built in a day, nor built as fast as Tammanytown, nor built in structural steel, but it turns out that most of Rome's mighty structures, temples, circuses, baths, aqueducts, were built in concrete, not reinforced with iron and steel, as we build now, but a good quality of sand, stone and cement nevertheless. On this powerful central core of cement was fitted an ornamental facing of finest marble.

Bedridden.

"Yes, ma'am," said Harry the Hobo, "I know I look like a strong man, but out of my fifty years of my life I've spent over sixteen years in bed."

"Why, you poor man," replied the lady, sympathetically, handing him a quarter. "What has been the trouble—paralysis?"

"No, ma'am," said Harry, "jest a reg'lar habit of sleepin' eight hours a day, ma'am."—Harper's Weekly.

Balm to the Suffragette.

The social worker stopped a small girl who was carrying a baby. "Isn't he a fine, big boy?" she began, ingratiatingly. "What's his name?"

The child waxed indignant. "It ain't a boy! Everybody thinks it's a boy." She hugged the baby closer. "You poor darlin'!" she soothed. "They ain't got much opinion of you, 'ave they?"—Life.

The Reason.

"That Mrs. Baggs is such a flirt. I should think her husband might check her."

"He might except for the fact that his wife's a widow."

MADE HIM SOMEWHAT TIRED

Mose Had Good Excuse for Wishing to Be Rid of the Company of Sam Jackson.

"'Twan't all account o' dat yaller gal, Saliny," explained Mose, talking with difficulty through the bandages that swatched his face.

"I goes out walking wid her and along comes that Sam Jackson, what she's been keeping company with. Widout saying a word dat man comes over and busts me in the mouf. No sooner did I get up dan, bam! He lands on my lef' year and over I goes again.

"After that he hit me in this year and then in the other one; and stomped on me while I was down. When I got up and began to run he followed, kicking me every yuther step.

"I never got so tired of a cullud man in all my life!"

HAIR CAME OUT IN BUNCHES

813 E. Second St., Muncie, Ind.—"My little girl had a bad breaking out on the scalp. It was little white lumps. The pimples would break out as large as a common pinhead all over her head. They would break and run yellow matter. She suffered nearly a year with itching and burning. It was sore and itched all the time. The matter that ran from her head was very thick. I did not comb her hair very often, her head was too sore to comb it, and when I did comb, it came out in bunches. Some nights her head itched so bad she could not sleep.

"I tried several different soaps and ointments, also patent medicine, but nothing could I get to stop it. I began using Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment this summer after I sent for the free samples. I used them and they did so much good I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment. I washed her head with Cuticura Soap and rubbed the Cuticura Ointment in the scalp every two weeks. A week after I had washed her head three times you could not tell she ever had a breaking out on her head. Cuticura Soap and Ointment also made the hair grow beautifully." (Signed) Mrs. Emma Patterson, Dec. 22, 1911.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

The Rev. Edmund Heslop of Wigton, Pa., suffered from Dropsy for a year. His limbs and feet were swollen and puffed. He had heart fluttering, was dizzy and exhausted at the least exertion. Hands and feet were cold and he had such a dragging sensation across the loins that it was difficult to move. After using 5 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills the swelling disappeared and he felt himself again. He says he has been benefited and blessed by the use of Dodds Kidney Pills. Several months later he wrote: I have not changed my faith in your remedy since the above statement was authorized. Correspond with Rev. E. Heslop about this wonderful remedy.

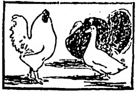
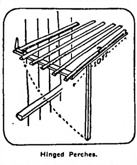
POULTRY



HINGED SYSTEM OF PERCHES

Attractive to Practical Man Whose Quarters Are Limited—Folds Up Against Side of House.

In cases where quarters are somewhat limited and houses necessarily correspondingly small, or where the saving of time and labor is a consideration, the hinged perch shown in the accompanying illustration posseses an attraction to the practical man. As will be seen, it is so constructed that it can be folded back against the side of the house out of the way during the daytime, thus facilitating the cleaning of the interior and for spraying to destroy insect life. Its construction is simple and fully explained in the drawing.



Hinged Perches.

MILK FOR PRODUCING EGGS

Experiments Conducted at West Virginia Station Show Skimmilk of Excellent Value.

Two tests are reported from the West Virginia station of the value of skimmilk compared with water for wetting a feed mash. In the first test, which covered 122 days, 22 hens fed skimmilk laid 1,244 eggs, as compared with 996 eggs laid by the 22 hens fed mash wet with water.

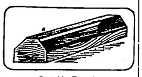
In the first period of the second test 60 hens fed the skimmilk ration laid 862 eggs in 37 days, as compared with 632 eggs laid by a similar lot fed no skimmilk. In the second period, which covered 56 days, the rations were reversed. The chickens fed skimmilk laid 1,220 eggs, as compared with 978 in the case of the lot fed no skimmilk. In every case the pens contained one cock to ten hens. In both experiments more eggs were produced when skimmilk was substituted for water for moistening the mash.

Under the conditions prevailing in these experiments, and with eggs selling for 20 or 25 cents per dozen, the skimmilk used for moistening the mash had a feeding value of from 1⅓ to 2 cents per quart. In these trials 802 quarts of skimmilk were fed, resulting in an increase in the egg production of 702 eggs, or almost an extra egg for each quart used.

TROUGH FOR CHICKEN FEED

Portable Device Keeps Half-Grown Birds Out of Food and Allows Little Ones to Eat.

To keep half-grown chickens out of their feed and make it available to the smaller ones of the flock a handy portable trough may be made as shown in the illustration, says the Iowa Homestead. It is seven inches wide and the slat across the top by which it may be carried is three inches wide, and about three inches higher than the edge of the trough. It would overbalance any chicken trying to stand in the feed.



Portable Trough.

Acid Phosphate in Henhouse.

The best practice is to use acid phosphate or floats freely in the henhouse. You can put the manure into order for drilling by thorough exposure to drying air and then pounding up and running through a coarse sieve. It is deficient in phosphoric acid, which the soil usually needs, and at least 50 pounds of a good grade of acid phosphate should be added to each 100 pounds of the dry manure. Four or five hundred pounds per acre may be the most profitable amount for your rye.

Handling a Goose.

In handling a goose, it should always be taken by the neck, and when lifted from the ground the body shoulud be turned with the back toward the person handling it. In that position it cannot strike, and will remain quiet. Partly support the body by seizing the first joint of the wing with one hand. If the goose is held facing one it will strike hard blows with its wings or scratch with its feet.

Overcrowding Injurious.

Overcrowding causes fowls to sweat at night, and this soon rots the feathers at the root. This is one reason why so many fowls shed feathers outside of the regular moulting season.

Room for Geese.

Considering that geese will live and thrive almost entirely on grass after the first few days of their lives, it is a wonder that we do not find them on more farms.

[illegible]

In [illegible] Winter They Must Have Shelter and Food Same as Other Poultry—Great Danger From Rains.

(By A. J. LEGG.)

The young guinea is about as tender a bird as we ever undertook to care for. They are of a wild nature and if one is lost from the hen in the grass it is almost useless to look for it.

The best plan is to let the hen cluck it back to her flock. We usually keep the young guineas shut up for a few days after they are hatched and feed them some bread crumbs, coarse corn meal and occasionally a hard-boiled egg.

They are given water and also sweet milk to drink. After they leave the hen's call, if the days are warm and sunshiny, they are given fine roughage. They gather bugs and worms so they need but little feeding.

The great danger is from the hard rains. If the hen does not seek shelter, the young guineas are very likely to get drowned.

I have seen young guineas so nearly drowned in a hard rain that it looked useless to bother with them, but after they were warmed up and dried they did not show any bad effects from their drenching.

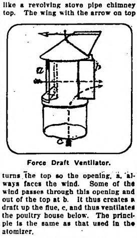
After the guineas are feathered out they need but little care as they are fully able to shift for themselves, until the winter cuts off their supply of food.

In winter they must have a shelter and food the same as other poultry, but should not be let out when there is snow on the ground else they will fly into the tops of trees or alight on the tops of buildings and refuse to come down.

VENTILATION FOR HEN HOUSE

Force Draft Ventilator Built Like Revolving Stove Pipe Chimney Top Is Illustrated.

Poultry houses are often unsatisfactory solely because they are badly ventilated. Of course, it is out of the question always to tear them down and build aney or to install the King system of ventilation, so some form of ventilation may be the best device to adopt. In the illustration is shown a force draft ventilator built like a revolving stove pipe chimney top. The wing with the arrow on top turns the top so the opening, a, always faces the wind. Some of the wind passes through this opening and out of the top at b. It thus creates a draft up the flue, c, and thus ventilates the poultry house below. The principle is the same as that used in the atomizer.



Force Draft Ventilator.

Pea Meal as Feed.

Pea meal is not quite so good a feeding stuff as the average gluten feed. It contains about 1 per cent. less protein, 3 per cent. less fat and nearly three times as much fiber.

Reasons for Eating.

The hen has three reasons for eating: to repair the tissues of her body, to keep herself warm, and to make eggs. It therefore follows that her diet must be varied and plentiful.

POULTRY NOTES

A neglected cold may turn into roup.

The comb is the chicken's health indicator.

Good development before beginning to lay, is best for the pullet.

For fattening a wet mash is good, but at other times let the mash be dry.

The old hens, especially those older than two years, should be fattened and sold.

The nearer square you build a poultry house, the less the cost of construction.

Begin right for the winter season by keeping nothing but healthy laying hens.

If you have only a few bushels of corn to shell for the poultry use the zinc washboard.

The chick that has been stunted will never make a show bird and seldom develop into a profitable fowl.

Well managed poultry is preferable to farm crops in that poultry will produce an income at all times of the year.

Capons are quiet, grow more per pound of feed than cockerels, grow longer and bring a better price per pound.

Once a day is sufficient for chickens to be fed a mash. The remainder of the day dry grain is considered better.

The best way of disposing of surplus late hatched cockerels (too late to be sold for broilers) is as capons.

The pullets which are undersized, have standard disqualification or a weak constitution, should be fattened and go to market with the cockerels.

Road dust makes a good material for the hen's dust bath and some poultrymen haul in a quantity of it at this season for use through the winter.

If you have a real love for the poultry tribe and do your best by them in any and all ways, you are certain to come out the winner in the long run.

Half of our poultry troubles come from being too busy to attend to the birds as we should, and the other half from not doing things when we do have time.

PERILS OF CLIMBING

Woman Gives Account of Narrow Escape From Death.

Guide Falls in a Crevasse While Scaling Peak in the Himalayas—Taken Unconscious and Dies Soon From Injuries.

Paris.—Mrs. Fanny Bullock Workman, the mountain climber, writing from Skardu in the Himalayas, sends the first detailed account of the accident which gave rise to the report that she had been killed by an avalanche. She says:

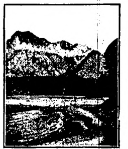
"We were crossing Bilapho pass at about an 18,000 foot height when I and an Italian porter who had accompanied me on four Himalayan expeditions, left the caravan in order that Dr. Workman might photograph us in a picturesque standpoint. After we had been photographed the porter, who was carrying the rope, strode ahead. I was about three paces behind when suddenly without a word or a cry he disappeared, carrying the rope which was the only means of extrication.

"I stood appalled on the brink of a blue hole in the ice and called to the others, who hurried to the spot. The head guide was an hour in advance. Having only one extra rope remaining the guide called down the crevasse and a faint reply showed that Chenoz, the porter, who was far below, was still alive. Six started after the head guide, who was back in an hour and a half, when Chenoz was extricated from an eighty foot depth.

"He was still conscious, but there was no pulse and he was nearly frozen. He was carried to camp and everything possible was done for him, but he died the same night from shock. He had not been expecting to meet a crevasse, and the accident was due entirely to his want of care. My own escape was simply miraculous."

The letter describes the work of the expedition on the Siachen or Rose glacier, which is the largest and longest in Asia.

During the nine days in July Dr. and Mrs. Workman and three Italian guides made the first ascents of four important snow passes at two sources of this glacier, the heights varying from 19,500 to 21,000 feet, which constitutes a record for glacial exploration. On two of these ascents Mrs. Workman established a relation of the northeast Karakoran water parting with Kashgar and two others and discovered two passes to the large and unknown Kondus glacier. An important climb was also made to the great Silver Thorne plateau, more than 21,000 feet east of the main peak of this group.



Distant View of Giant Peak of Himalayas.

From the northeast Siachen pass, a pass to Kashgar was found and a new group of high peaks discovered beyond the east Siachen boundary on the Kashgar side. The highest of these is 25,000 feet high.

The sixth ascent was of a high peak northeast of Bilapho pass, which was crossed in reaching the Siachen. This was made on July 11. The last 800 feet of this peak was at an angle of 50 degrees and each step was cut on as surface of black ice. An extensive view of the summit enabled the explorer to map out much future work.

For six weeks all the camps were above 17,000 feet and the cold was often intense. Grafit Peterkin, a London surveyor, was enabled, owing to favorable weather, to map the entire Rose glacier. Mrs. Workman's expedition of 1911 and 1912 makes the previously unexplored Siachen the most thoroughly explored of any of the Himalayan glaciers. The expedition after traversing one of the new passes connecting the Siachen glacier with the Hondus will make the first descent of the Kondus glacier to Karmene and Baltistan.

LORD INDORSES HEALTH RULE

Two Meals Daily, With but Six Hours' Sleep Suffice Busy Canadian Commissioner.

London.—"I thoroughly indorse Frederick Harrison's five golden rules of health, and consider them to contain excellent advice," said Lord Strathcona, the high commissioner of Canada, recently. "Let me see," he said. "Mr. Harrison is eighty-one years old. Oh, he is quite a young man. I am eleven years his senior and still young. Why, my memory is as good today as it was fifty years ago."

Speaking of Mr. Harrison's golden rules, "They are excellent," said Lord Strathcona. "Personally I haven't smoked within the past twenty years, and do not believe in smoking. I certainly think that people eat too much, and that it may be injurious for them to do so. For many years I have only had two meals a day—breakfast and dinner.

"As for sleep, I make a point of not sleeping longer than six hours a day as against Mr. Harrison's eight hours. I find that six hours are enough for me."

Child Falls 110 Feet.

WOMEN SHOULD NEVER USE HARSH PHYSICS

Women are especially susceptible to constipation and their more delicate organisms rebel at the violence of cathartics and purgatives. Drastic medicines like salts, mineral waters, pills and powders may afford temporary relief, but their violent action on the stomach and bowels tends to upset the entire system.

A mild laxative is far preferable and more effective. The combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin prescribed by Dr. W. B. Caldwell, and sold in drug stores under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is ideal for women, being gentle in action, positive in effect and pleasant to the taste. A spoonful of Syrup Pepsin at night will bring natural relief next morning and, used regularly for a brief period, will so strengthen and tone the muscles of the stomach and bowels that there will be little, if any, further need for medicine.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can be procured in any drug store. Your name and address on a postal to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 203 West St., Monticello, Ill., will bring a free trial bottle by return mail. Adv.

Peter Doubt's Recipe for Success.

"When I am asked," the Minneapolis Messenger quotes Peter Doubt as saying, "the secret of success, I—" "Surely nobody ever came to you for that," interrupted his wife, with just a touch of sarcasm. "Not up to so far," admitted Mr. Doubt, calmly. "But some day some one will. Bound to. Everybody over fifty years of age is asked, sooner or later, to say what he thinks is the secret of success. And so when they ask me I shall say; 'Simply this: if you feel that you must be born, try to be born lucky.'"

They Presented Arms.

Two very charming young ladies were chatting in a tramcar the other evening.

"So you've been down to the camp?" said one.

"Yes; and it's splendid down there."

"Did the soldiers have their arms with them?"

"Of course they did! You don't suppose they would leave them at home, do you?"

"I shouldn't like to be there when they were firing. I hate firing."

"Why, silly, they don't fire."

"Don't they? What do they do with their arms, then?"

"Why, they put them round you, of course, and it's ever so nice."

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Your Opportunity Is NOW in the Province of Saskatchewan, Western Canada

Do you desire to get a Free Homestead of 160 ACRES of that well known Wheat Land? The area is becoming more limited but no less valuable.

NEW DISTRICTS have recently been opened up for settlement, and into these railroads are now being built. The day will soon come when there will be no

A Swift Current, Saskatchewan, farmer writes: "I came on my homestead, March 1906, with about $1,000 worth of horses and machinery, and just $35 in cash. Today I have 960 acres of wheat, 300 acres of oats, and 50 acres of flax." Not bad for six years, but only an instance of what may be done in Western Canada in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta.

DEFIANCE STARCH never sticks to the iron.

Every invalid woman is invited to consult our Staff of Physicians, Surgeons and Specialists, at the Invalid's Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., by letter or personally at my expense.—R. V. PIERCE, M. D.

I Invite Suffering Women

There is every reason why women should not trust their delicate constitutions in the hands of unskilled persons. It requires a thorough medical education to appreciate and understand the delicate female organism. There is every reason why she should write or personally consult an experienced specialist.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, "Favorite Prescription" imparts strength to the whole system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. For "run-down," debilitated women of all occupations is unequaled as a restorative tonic. As a soothing and strengthening nervine "Favorite Prescription" allays and subdues nervous excitability, irritability nervous exhaustion, and other distressing symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic diseases of the feminine organs. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

DR. PIERCE'S

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is devised and put up by a physician of vast experience in the treatment of women's maladies. Its ingredients have the indorsement of leading physicians in all schools of practice.

The "Favorite Prescription" has been sold by dealers in medicine in its liquid form for over 40 years. Now it can also be obtained of them in tablet form—or send 50 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce for trial box.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels. One to three a dose. Easy to take as candy

Send 31 one-cent stamps to pay cost of wrapping and mailing only on a free copy of Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1008 pages, cloth-bound. Invalid's Hotel and Surgical Institute, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y.

"It Helped Me So Much."

Mrs. F. W. Myers, of Bolines, Pa., says: "Your 'Favorite Prescription' has done me a wonderful lot of good.

"Seven years ago when our first child was born I was left miserable. I doctored with two physicians without any relief. I then went to see one of the head doctors in Williamsport; he said I must have an operation at once and that I should quit work, but that was something I could not do. I then began taking your 'Favorite Prescription' and it helped me so much. I always suffered so until our last child when I got along nicely. I shall never go through it again without your medicine.

"Will close by wishing you much success in future."

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientist for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng. and decide for themselves whether the New French Remedy "THERAPION" No. 1 No. 2 or No. 3 is what they require and have been seeking in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Therapion is sold by druggists or mail $1.00. Fougera Co., 90 Beekman St., New York.

BOYS KEEP FAITH.

Thirty-two of the Fifty-five, Who Were Allowed to Leave Training School Are Back.

Red Wing.—While Dr. C. O. Merica, superintendent of the Red Wing training school for boys, sat in a dentist's chair, his thoughts far from honor systems and incorrigible boys, fifteen youngsters, fourteen from St. Paul and Minneapolis, and one from Duluth, climbed off a train, marched proudly through the city streets, out to the traning school, into the office, and, saluting, "reported back for duty" to J. T. Fulton, assistant superintendent of the training school.

Last Wednesday evening, Dr. Merica allowed fifty-five inmates at the school to leave for their home for Thanksgiving, exacting from them only their words of honor they would return today, or Tuesday. They went without guards, without officials, and without any mark to distinguish them from the boys whom they would meet away from the school. Dr. Merica said they would return; others shrugged their shoulders and doubted.

But Dr. Merica is now vindicated, and his theory that boys are boys, and should be treated as such and not as criminals, was justified.

"We certainly enjoyed ourselves," declared one of the lads. "None of us thought of not coming back. Didn't we promise Dr. Merica that we would return. Well, that's enough. We ain't breaking our words to him."

Of the fifty-five boys who were permitted to leave the institution last week, twenty-two have already returned. This includes the seventeen football men, who, with Coach Murdauch left Wednesday evening and played ball on Thanksgiving at Rivel Falls, Wis., and at Hastings, Minn., on Friday. The rest of the youngsters, according to Assistant Superintendent Fulton, are not expected back until later.

"Some of them were given a longer leave than others," he explained. "But we do not anticipate any more trouble with those who have not returned than we had with those who have already reported. Dr. Merica's experiment has proved an unqualified success."

Mr. Fulton said that the majority of the boys still away from school were in the Twin City.

PARKERS STARTS NORTH

Minnesota Officials Arrive in Georgia for Absconding Winnebago Banker.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 4.—Sheriff Freers of Blue Earth, Minn., and District Attorney Bellis of Faribault county, Minn., arrived at West Point, where they went to get Harry W. Parker, the absconding Winnebago, Minn., banker, arrested in that place.

They had no conversation with the prisoner regarding his crime or confession immediately after their arrival in West Point, the sheriff, who is to accompany Parker to Winnebago, and the attorney, who is to prosecute, went to the jail. After short greetings and inquiries into the prisoner's health, the Minnesota officials returned to their hotel, where arrangements were made for paying the reward of $1,250 which will probably be turned over to Mayor Johnson and those who assisted him in the arrest.

Friends of the absconding banker's actress wife had planned to donate a purse toward paying her transportation to her home in Cleveland, Ohio. She stated that she intended carrying out her original plan to accompany her husband to Minnesota. It is believed, however, that she will return to her home in Ohio.

Defalcation May Be Larger.

Winnebago.—That the total defalcation of Harry W. Parker, vice president and cashier of the Bank of Commerce of Winnebago, Minn., under arrest at West Point, Ga., may be far in excess of $20,000, the amount missing from the bank, was the prediction made by Henry C. Frundt, a Winnebago attorney, who obtained requisition papers for bringing Parker back to Minnesota.

Sells 165,000 Acres.

Fergus Falls.—Concluding a state land sale here Saturday by selling 2,200 acres of land at prices ranging from $7 to $21 an acre, State Auditor Iverson completed the last of the state land sales for the year, and announced that he had disposed of 165,000 acres at average price of $8.50 an acre, against 169,000 acres last year at an average of $7 and acre. This means that Mr. Iverson has brought into the state treasury $1,402,500 this year.

Woman Attacked At Kasota.

St. Peter.—Ruthlessly struck down from in back and then beaten into insensibility, Mrs. Gertrude Winslow was assaulted in the outskirts of Kasota village. Several hundred armed men patrolled the road and searched the woods in all directions from the town until long after dark, but no trace of the woman's assailant has been found.

Mrs. Winslow, whose home is in Lemmon, S. D., has been visiting for three weeks with her uncle.

John Redmond's Daughter to Marry.

Dublin.—A marriage has been arranged between Max Green, chairman of the Irish prisons board and recently private secretary to the lord lieutenant, and Miss Johanna Redmond, the youngest daughter of John E. Redmond, the leader of the Irish parliamentary party. Miss Redmond is about 22 years old. She recently has devoted part of her time to writing for the stage. The exact date of the ceremony has not been announced, as yet.

DECLAIM IN NORSE.

Eau Claire Contestant Wins Oratory Prize—Minneapolis Girl Is Third.

Minneapolis.—In a Norwegian declamation contest between representatives from high schools and colleges throughout the Northwest for the Quale declamation medals, Miss Rogna Tanjerd, 19 years old, of Eau Claire high school was declared the winner and was awarded the gold medal. Miss Elizabeth Nissen of Minneapolis was awarded third prize. The contest was held in the Bethlehem Lutheran church, Fourteenth avenue south and Eighteenth street, and more than a thousand Norwegians from the different societies in this city were present.

It was the first annual contest for the Quale medals, which were offered by Mrs. Anna Quale of Eau Claire, Wis., in memory of her son who died a few years ago. She has given $1,000, which is to be used each year for medals to be given for the best declamation made by a high school or university student in the annual contest. Part of the money each year is to be also set aside for eighteen silver medals, which are given in a preliminary contest to the winners of the various competitions.

Other winners of prizes were: Trygve Svare of Park Region college, Fergus Falls, second prize, a Norwegian picture by Saether, and Miss Ragna Opjorden of St. Olaf college, fourth prize, who received a Norwegian book.

The other contestants on the program were: Miss Helma Bossness, Eau Claire, Wis.; Miss Louise Mortenson, Olympia, Wash.; Alma Anderson, Colfax, Wis., and Miss Alma Haug, Rhinelander, Wis. The judges were: C. P. Prestgard, Carl Hansen and Rev. T. Eggen. Professor Grisle Bothne, Norwegian instructor at the University of Minnesota, presented the prizes to the winners.

It was announced by Waldmer Ager of Eau Claire, secretary of the National Norwegian society, who presided at the contest, that a similar declamation contest would be arranged for schools along the Pacific coast, next spring. Later it is planned to bring the winners of the sectional contests together in a national competition.

GIVES SKIN FOR CHILD.

Charles Copeland, of St. Paul Y. M. C. A. Submits to Operation in New York.

New York, Dec. 4.—Thirty-six square inches of skin were stripped from Charles Copeland of St. Paul, Minn., in an operation and grafted on four-year-old Bertha Wuecher. The operation was performed by Dr. A. B. Tilton, assisted by Drs. Abraham A. Levy and Henry Friedman of St. Mark's hospital staff.

The accident that rendered Copeland's sacrifice necessary occurred three months ago while Bertha's father, Louis Wuecher, was away at work, and her mother out marketing, and the child was left to mind both her baby brother and the family soup pot. When the soup boiled up Bertha tried to set it on the back of the stove. It spilled over and, in trying to save the baby, all the tender skin was scalded from the child's breast. When the wound refused to heal last week, Dr. Tilton advertised a reward for some one who would give up the necessary cuticle to save the little girl's life.

Copeland, who is in New York visiting his father, volunteered to give up the skin required and the grafting operation but refused to accept the reward. He was a gymnasium instructor at the St. Paul Y. M. C. A. for several years.

RINES TO BE SPEAKER

Wins Out Against Opposition in Minnesota Legislature.

St. Paul.—Hon. Henry Rines of Mora will be speaker of the Minnesota house this winter. Following a statement by Mr. Rines, giving the names of sixty-eight of the 120 members pledged to his support, all of his rival republican candidates withdrew and extended their congratulations.

In Mr. Rines' statement he declares that he has made not a single pledge or promise of committee assignments or patronage in order to get votes, and that he is absolutely independent. He says this shows that "the old order of things is passing away."

Child Is Scalded to Death.

Hastings.—The 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claudius Irrthum of New Trier met death by falling into a kettle of hot water.

Commission Form Wins.

Duluth.—Returns indicate that Duluth overwhelmingly adopted the commission form of government. Twenty-nine out of forty-four voting precincts report a total of 4,835 vote for and 2,181 against. Returns are in from the central wards, where the opposition was strongest, and it is believed the present proportion will at least be maintained in the city totals. The new charter was opposed by the Socialists, liquor and other special interests.

News Kept From Wife.

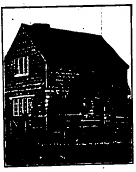
Winnebago. — Mrs. H. W. Parker, faithful to her husband through the trying weeks and months of his disgrace, tenaciously grasping the slender thread of belief that he was more sinned against than sinning in his embezzlement from a bank, always believing that the cloud upon his reputation and upon their home would be lifted, has just been told by her children, that their father and her husband is under arrest in Georgia, a confessed defaulter and a bigamist.

PRESCOTT TAVERN IN MAINE

Historic Inn Still Visited by Many—Prominent Politicians Made Their Boarding House Here.

Monmouth, Me.—Near the level plain that stretches northward from Monmouth Academy in this city, overlooking a long reach of undulating woodland, with the hazy outline of the White Mountains in the distance stands the oldest relic of coaching days, the Prescott Tavern. Square as a blockhouse, hip roofed, and once crowned with a great chimney, it harks back to 1801, when it was built by Capt. Sewall Prescott. Though somewhat decayed and battered, it is an interesting landmark. The front door has been ajar a decade, and sightseers come and go at will. The building is owned by the Prescott estate.

One of the curiosities of the place is the old taproom. This room was to the day of 1800 what the little place behind the screen in the modern eating house is to the present. The doors leading from the taproom to the narrow side hall are double, a fact suggestive of the large puncheons that often found entrance there. Through this entrance the troops were marched in double file when they came from the muster field nearby to flood the dust from their throats with Capt. Prescott's "West India and molasses."



Old Prescott Tavern.

Many visitors are attracted here in the summer.

The summer following the building of the house, in 1801, it received a christening that immortalized it. Francis Asbury, the pioneer bishop, sat in the upper hall at the head of a handful of Methodist circuit riders, and conducted the proceedings of the second New England conference held in Maine. A congregation supposed to represent one-sixth of all the Methodists in New England gathered outside the doors to listen to a discourse from his venerable lips.

After Monmouth Academy became an educational institution of some importance, Prescott's Tavern became the boarding place of many men who have since won laurels in the political arena. Tenantless and dreary, the "old fort," as it is often called, stands like a ghost of historic days.

PRISONER IN SPAIN THWARTE

Nevada Man Is Stopped Just as He Is About to Sail Into Old Clutches.

New York.—Guy Sisson, a business man of Winnemucca, Nev., did not sail on the liner Lorraine, although his trunk was at the pier and he had come all the way from Nevada for the purpose. He was prevailed upon to remain in America by central office detectives, who persuaded him he was being made the victim of swindlers.

Mr. Sisson drew $4,000 from his bank in Winnemucca a week ago, in order to take it to Spain to assist a famous old Spanish prisoner to obtain release from durance vile. In return for his assistance he had been promised a half share in the Spaniard's fortune of $48,000.

The New York detectives learned of Mr. Sission's errand from some of the Nevada man's friends back home and told him on his arrival here that this same Spanish prisoner has been conducting this same swindling industry for half a century and that his business is so extensive that he employs scores of clerks and occupies an office building in Madrid.

SCHOOL GIRLS BAN SPOONING

California Coeds Take Action on What They Call "Queening"—Permitted 6 P. M. and 6 A. M.

Whittier, Cal.—"Queening" has been officially and formally condemned by the Y. M. C. A. coeds at Whittier college. "Queening" has been variously known as "fussing" and "campustry," while the accepted term outside the collegiate pale is "spooning." However, there will be no more "queening" if the girls have their way. They say it interferes with studies and keeps the football squad from needed training.

"No girl shall study with the young men or hold unnecessary conversation with them between the hours of 6 a. m. and 6 p. m." is the order that has been promulgated, and while it is condemned by a large number of coeds and unanimously by the male students, they find satisfaction in the fact that there are a few suitable hours which are not proscribed.

GRANGE ASKS GOOD ROADS

National Body Meeting at Spokane Favors Federal Aid for Movement.

Spokane, Wash.—Discussion of the report of Oliver Wilson, national master, before the forty-sixth annual conclave of the national grange, developed the fact that the grange virtually is unanimous in advocating federal aid for public road improvement.

The legislative committee will be instructed to urge congress to pass a bill appropriating road funds to be administered under a national board acting in conjunction with similar commissions from the state.

In Minnesota.

Important Happenings of the Week Briefly Told.

Hastings.—J. C. Valois, employed by the Milwaukee railroad, had his left leg cut off in the yards here.

Winona.—Benjamin Taylor of Mankato was substituted for J. C. Nethaway of Stillwater to make the principal address at the annual memorial service of the Winona Elks Sunday afternoon.

Minneapolis. — Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Brackett, their daughter Nell and Miss Madge Sodagren who lives with the family, were driven from their home, 342 Mississippi River boulevard, early Sunday morning in scant attire, when fire as a result of an overheated furnace started a blaze that practically destroyed the house. All sought shelter with neighbors, making the trip in their bare feet.

Minneapolis.—This city will, in common with the country at large, will be cut off from most of its oil supply after December 1, Charles S. Pollock, general manager of the Standard Oil company in Minneapolis, announced that all crude or fuel oil would hereafter be refined, because of the increased use of refined oils for lubricating purposes, and of gasoline in automobiles and engines.

Aurora.—Frank Karon, a young miner, was the victim of an apparently cold-blooded murder when he was shot and instantly killed by his friend, Frank Bushel, also a miner. The killing occurred in an Austrian boarding house. Bushel escaped, but was arrested later. Witnesses declare that Karon, Bushel, Louis Demosich and several companions had an altercation. He was shot through the heart.

Minneapolis.—Christmas parcels directed to Sweden, Norway, Germany, Austria and Denmark have begun pouring in upon the clerks of the postoffice. Each of the parcels has a customs declaration ticket attached to it. Shoes, dress material, made-up dresses, scarfs and gloves constitute the bulk of the parcels to friends in Europe. Parcels intended for Austrialia and the Far East already have gone forward.

Rochester.—In a whirlwind campaign lasting ten days, the Rochester Y. M. C. A. raised more than $12,000, which will clear all its indebtedness and leave a small sum for needed improvements. The campaign came to a close with a rousing rally at which more than 10 were present, including leading business men, who have given their time in procuring the necessary money. A silver loving cup was presented one team.

Fergus Falls.—A curious election contest was decided here last week. No one filed for court commissioner for this county at the recent election, and the official returns showed five votes for O. E. Rockwog, four for W. P. Bayley and four for John Embertson. Mr. Bayley knew that he had received more than four votes, and instituted a contest. The recount increased Rockwog's vote to eight and Bayley's to eleven, giving Mr. Bayley the election.

Minneapolis, Dec. 2. — Seventeen Minneapolis news dealers were arrested and arraigned before United State Commissioner Howard S. Abbott in the crusade begun by the federal government to suppress the sale of "Jim Jam Jems," a monthly issued at Bismarck, N. D., whose publishers, Samuel H. Clark and others, were recently indicted by the federal grand jury at Fargo, N. D. They are charged with having accepted from express companies copies of the semi-annual number of "Jim Jam Jems."

Winnebago.—John Sharp, who is the president of the defunct Bank of Commerce of Winnebago, has been arrested at Dexter, Minn., by Deputy Sheriff Loft of Winnebago. The charge against Sharp was sworn out by the state banking department. He is charged with swearing to false statements of the financial condition of the bank, and is further charged with obstructing the superintendent of banks in the official discharge of his duties. The warrant was sworn out by a deputy state bank examiner.

Cloquet.—Dr. Ernest Bryant Hoag of Leland Stanford university of California, who was in the city for several days inspecting school children for the state board of health, completed his work last week. He has visited the schools in about twenty cities of the state. His plan where there are no means at the disposal of the school for health purposes is to show the teachers how to recognize the various defects in pupils that are a handicap to health, physical and mental. He urges also the employment of a visiting nurse. Where there are funds for health purposes and a progressive school system, he recommends the services of both nurse and physician, the nurse for full time and the doctor for consultation, and always he insists on the training of teachers to recognize the defects detrimental to the child's progress and health.

Waseca.—The Ladies' Auxiliary, A. O. H., held its county convention in this city and elected the following officers: Mrs. Mary Donovan, president; Mrs. Anna Coughlin, vice president; Mrs. Dalton, secretary; Mrs. Fannie McGuire, treasurer; Mesdames Smith, McCarty, Cahill, Coughlin, Glenn and Burke, directors.

Redwood Falls.—Ray Lewis, age 18, who brutally assaulted the 15-year-old daughter of a farmer near this city several weeks ago was convicted at the November session of the district court and given an indefinite sentence ranging from seven to thirty years.

Duluth. — At a joint meeting a half a dozen civic organizations here Friday night it was decided to open a "poor man's bank" to loan money to those in temporary need at a low rate of interest. The action taken is in line with a movement started some time ago to force the salary and furniture loan agents, who it is claimed in many instances lend money at as high an interest as 300 per cent per annum, out of business.

Cannon Falls.—While pouring gasoline from a cup on a stove generator, Walter Johnson was severely burned about the face and one hand.

INDIVIDUAL ROAD RACING CHAMPION

Ralph De Palma, Champion Driver.

Ralph De Palma is the individual road racing champion of America for the season of 1912, and the car honors go to the Fiat, according to the finding of the jury of critics, which passes upon such things, the American Automobile association declining to undertake the task of picking title holders.

De Palma succeeds to the unofficial title, which in the past has been held by Harvey Herrick, Ralph Mulford and Bert Dingley, through having won four out of the five road races, in which he started last summer. Teddy Tetzlaff might be styled runner-up, because of his having won three firsts, while Harry Endicett is next with two.

The 1912 road racing season wound up with the running of the Phoenix desert events, and following the dropping of the curtain the results of the year have been summarized by C. G. Sinsebaugh, chairman of the contest board of the Chicago Automobile club, who makes his report in the Motor Age.

Critics will be surprised to find that 1912 wasn't so much of an "off" year as anticipated. There were twenty road races run as against twenty-seven in 1911. There were 156 entries in the twenty events, as against 202 the season previous, and the average number of starters was slightly in excess of 1911. The distances averaged greater, too, 232 as against 206. A better percentage of finishers, also, is reported, while the same number of makes of cars competed this year as last—forty-four.

UMPIRES SELECT ALL-STARS

Evans and Klem Tell Who They Think Are the Best Players in Their Respective Leagues.

Umpires in the major leagues are certainly in a good position to judge ball players. William Evans of the American league and Bill Klem of the National league have picked two all-star teams, one representing what Evans thinks is the best in the younger organization and the other in the topliners, to the mind of Klem, in the National league. These selections express the opinion of the arbiters as to the worth of each ball player and how each man has helped his club throughout the present season.

The selection for the American league, by Billy Evans, is:

Catcher—Stanage, Detroit.
Pitcher—Johnson, Washington.
Shortstop—Wagner, Boston.
First Base—McInnis, Athletics.
Second Base—Collins, Athletics.
Third Base—Baker, Athletics.
Right Field—Cobb, Detroit.
Center Field—Speaker, Boston.
Left Field—Jackson, Cleveland.
Utility Infielder—Barry, Athletics.
Utility Outfielder—Milan, Washington.

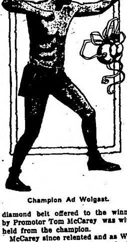
That for the National league, by W. J. Klem, is:

Catchers—Archer, Chicago; Meyers, New York.
Pitchers — Mathewson, Marquard and Tesreau, New York; Rucker, Brooklyn.
First Base—Daubert, Brooklyn.
Second Base—Doyle, New York.
Third Base—Zimmerman, Chicago.
Shortstop—Wagner, Pittsburg.
Outfielders—Bescher, Cincinnati; Magee, Philadelphia; Wilson, Pittsburgh; Schulte, Chicago.
Utility Infielder—Sweeney, Boston.

DIAMOND BELT TO WOLGAST

Champion Is Presented With Valuable Trophy by Tom McCarey, San Francisco Promoter.

Because of the unsatisfactory termination of the fight between Ad Wolgast and Joe Rivers for the lightweight championship on July 4, the diamond belt offered to the winner by Promotor Tom McCarey was withheld from the champion.



Champion Ad Wolgast.

McCarey since relented and as Wolgast was about to board a train for San Francisco, McCarey appeared and presented the champion with the belt, much to the surprise of the Cadillac battler. The belt, which is of solid gold and set with four large diamonds, is valued at $1,000.

Noted Sprinters May Visit U. S.

Louis Guertin, the professional all-round athlete of Boston, is to go to England to seek matches with Reggie Walker, Jack Donaldson or A. B. Postle, who rank among the world's speediest sprinters. All three are likely to come to the United States.

Miss Curtis Retains Title.

Miss Margaret Curtis, of Boston, won the national woman's golf championship for the third time on the Essex county links, defeating Mrs. Ronald H. Barlow, of Philadelphia, by a score of three up and two to play.

UNUSUAL HANDICAP IN GOLF

Extremely Nervous Player Unable to Play Good Game on Account of Anticipated Noise.

An unusual golf handicap was played on one of the local links recently, the proponent of the same winning hands down. One of the rules of golf is that one must not talk to a player when he is about to make a drive, nor must others discuss any subject in his hearing. It might take his mind off the game for just an instant and that might be fatal.

In Kansas City lives a crack but extremely nervous golf enthusiast. He had been in the habit of beating a fat and phlegmatic friend until the latter tired of it.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," the friend said not long ago. "I will play you eighteen holes if you will give me a handicap."

"Done," said the nervous player. "Name the handicap."

"There times during the game, and not more than three, I am to be permitted to stand behind you and say 'Boo' while you are preparing to drive."

Every time it was the nervous man's play his fat friend walked up and just stood behind him. Never once during the game did the fat man say "Boo!" or anything else. But the anticipation at the expected "Boo!" was fairly nerve-shattering, and the fat man won hands down.—Kansas City Journal.

GOSSIP AMONG SPORTS

Carl Morris has come back to earth knocking out some poor dub.

Five years ago Jeff Tesreau was canned by the Ironton (Mo.) team.

It is hoped that there will be no protest of any Wisconsin or Minnesota players this year.

Football would be a great little sport, all right, if one could avoid the arguments afterward.

Ban Johnson is said to have offered Hank O'Day a fat salary to work in his league next season.

Bat Nelson is to be given a test, says a report. The owner of Hegewisch has always been ready for that.

This seems to be a swell year for appointing shrimp managers. Note Miller Huggins and Johnny Evers.

Now billiards comes to the front with a wrangle. It was thought billiards came close to sportsmanship.

Memphis has purchased Shortstop William Oriet of the champion Missoula team of the Union association.

Bobby Byrne, the Pirate's third sacker, says he cleaned up $300 on the barnstorming trip the Pirates took.

The football coach who refused to base a prediction upon his honest opinion is fast becoming a back number.

Chief Bender was a big hero in 1811; he is mentioned for sale or trade in 1912. Fame is fleeting in baseball, too.

The only thing one can tell by odds on football games is that usually one school has more money than the other.

Morris Rath, the Sox's little second baseman, was the busiest toiler last season. Morris appeared in 157 games.

The worst of football is the deadly "what might have been" conversations one is obliged to listen to the next day.

Mordecai Brown may be out of the national pastime for keeps, but he will never be out of the hearts of the Chicago fans.

In the talk of a possible sale of the Buffalo International league club, it is stated that the price put on the property was $75,000.

It is easy to say that a football team is a good fighter as it is to say a person has a good heart—and that's the last thing one cay say.

In an effort to boom his administration, friends of Miller Huggins are preparing a rough road for him by claiming the pennant for the Cardinals.

Evidently this visiting Japanese billiard player is as proficient in his profession as most of his countrymen are in their particular lines of work.

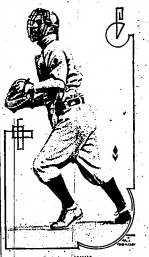
FAVOR MANAGERS WHO PLAY

Club Owners Are Said to Have Little Use for "Bench" Directors—Killifer Worked Hard.

Baseball owners are of the opinion that a playing manager is of greater value to a club than one who directs from the bench. In choosing a man they usually strive to get one who can participate actively in the contests throughout the season. Charlie Dooin, leader of the Philadelphia National league team, holds the belief that while a playing manager may be preferable, he ought not to be a backstop, as he, Dooin, is.

It will be remembered that Dooin did little catching last season. He was out for a while owing to an injured leg, but allowed Killifer to do most of the catching even when he was in condition.

Dooin also is credited with the statement that a catcher should not be a manager. He declares that a young pitcher cannot do himself justice with the director behind the plate. In straining himself to demonstrate to the chief what he possesses in the way of speed he often outdoes himself, consequently failing to get the best results. Dooin has found it this way while catching the youngsters, and therefore allowed Killifer to don the mask nearly all the time.



Catcher Killifer.

When he caught the youngsters twirled raggedly, but as soon as Killifer got behind the bat they did entirely different work.

It is on account of his belief relative to playing managers that Dooin believes a leader who is a catcher does not have any success with his pitchers. He mentioned Kling and Bresnahan as examples.

AGREE ON BOXING WEIGHTS

Poundage Has Been Increased Materially in All Classes With Exception of Bantamweight.

The movement to establish an international set of rules and weights to govern all boxing matches in America, England and France is now in concrete form. The men who supervise boxing here and abroad have agreed on a new set of rules and a way to properly enforce them. The following scale of weights has been passed by the American board and will be forwarded to France and England for approval:

Class	Proposed Weight.	American.	English.
Paper	108	105	—
Bantam	115	116	118
Feather	125	122	126
Light	135	133	135
Welter	145	142	145
Middle	158	158	160
Commission	175	—	—
Heavy—All over 175 pounds.

It will be seen by the proposed scale of weights that the poundage has been increased materially in all the classes except the bantamweight. This class is now fixed at 116 pounds. The new scale proposed is 115 pounds. This is three pounds less than the English rules demand.

The "commission" class is a new one. It seeks to establish a brigade of fighters, known during the past few years as "light-heavy," but which had no standing as a distinctive class. This "commission" class will call for fighters weighing 175 pounds or less, and will give such men as Gunboat Smith and Sailor Burke a chance to compete with men of their weight. The heavy class will be open to all who weigh more than 175 pounds.

The question of when will the men weigh in arose during the formulation of the new scale. It was decided that the men weigh in at the ring side.

Those in control are of one mind for a universal code of rules and weights and it is only a matter of six weeks or two months before the rules will be uniform.

Stallings' Big Contract.

It has been unofficially announced that George Stallings, who is to be the manager of the Boston Nationals next year, has consented to go there only with a five-year contract at an enormous salary. Stallings has disposed of his holdings in the Buffalo club to John Ganzel, who will manage the Buffalos in 1913. It is said that he will retain only half a dozen men of this years' Boston team, among them only three pitchers. Perdue, Tyler and Hess. Stallings is not a bit impressed with the caliber of the present Boston players and hopes to have many trades between the end of the season and the beginning of next.

Marvelous Swimming Record.

Peter John Newell, the aged Samoan swimmer who for more than 20 years has held the record for long distance and endurance swims, broke his own record by remaining 37 hours and 12 minutes in the water without support of any kind and without partaking of food. Newell's great feat was accomplished on his sixty-eighth birthday anniversary.

LAW TO PROHIBIT INTER-MARRIAGES

GEORGIA MAN SCORES PROCEDURE BY WHICH AFRICAN CAN TAKE WHITE BRIDE.

USES STRONG LANGUAGE.

Declares Mixed Unions May Some Day Bring Country to a Conflict—Railroad Hearing Ends.

Washington, Dec. 12.—A denunciation of the legal procedure under which "a brown hued, black skinned, thick lipped, brutal hearted African can walk into an office of the law and demand an edict guaranteeing him legal wedlock to a white woman," was one of many sensational features of a speech in the house by Representative Roddenberry of Georgia, in favor of a resolution he had introduced earlier to prohibit inter-marriage of whites and negroes.

The measure, a direct result of the recent marriage of Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist, with a white girl, did not get to vote; but it enlivened a dull day's proceedings and incidentally aided in a filibuster of Representative Goldfogle of New York that sent the Burnett illiteracy test immigration bill over until probably the middle of January.

Civil War Probable.

Mr. Roddenberry prophesied that the legal sanction of mixed marriages ultimately might bring this country a conflict. He declared that "no brutality, infamy or degredation in all the days of southern slavery possessed such villainous characteristics and atrocious qualities as the permission of that marriage by the laws of this country."

In Chicago, he said, not only is the white slave traffic carried on, but "the white girls of this country are made the slaves of an African brute, sanctioned by the laws of the state, and solemnized by a form of the marriage ceremony."

Mr. Roddenberry added:

"We say this is a great country with its morals, traditions, virtues and examples, deserving to be emulated and envied by the other countries of the earth. But we see an African with much brutal force, with no moral character, with no stamina, in defiance of the laws of Illinois—yea, in accordance with the laws of Illinois—in defiance of the municipal regulations, entering the office of a probating magistrate, or other legal officer, in that city, and calling on him to issue, 'to me, Jack Johnson,' a marriage license to wed a young American woman, of our own blood, our own color."

The speaker declared that "in the fellowship between the blacks and the whites in the South the blacks respected the superiority of their former masters, and would commit self destruction before entertaining the thought of matrimony with a Caucasian girl."

New Haven Hearings End.

Hearings were concluded by the house rules committee on the O'Shaunnesy resolution to provide for a congressional investigation of a proposed traffic agreement between the New York, New Haven and Hartford and Grand Trunk railroads, which is alleged to have resulted in suspension of work on the Southern New England railway.

Taft Going To Canal.

Washington, Dec. 12.—President Taft will leave Washington at midnight, Dec. 11 for Key West, Fla., whence he will sail Dec. 21 for Panama on the battleship Arkansas. Mrs. Taft, a military and naval aide, Secretary Hilles, C. P. Taft, the president's brother, and probably several other persons will be in the party. The president is expected to reach Washington on the return trip Dec. 31.

150,000 Eggs Sold.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 12.—One hundred and fifty thousand eggs were sold at stations in various sections of the city by members of the Housekeepers' league in the first day of their campaign to break the corner which they claim has been maintained by retailers here. Eggs that have been selling for from 27 cents to 49 cents a dozen were sold by the women at 24 cents.

Grain Shipments Close.

Fort Williams, Ont., Dec. 12.—A fleet of five ships, carrying more than 500,000 bushels of grain, left here and Port Arthur last night for Buffalo. This marks the close of grain shipments from the Canadian head of the lakes for 1912. Several vessels are expected within a day or two and will load grain for storage.

Tinker to Manage Reds.

New York, Dec. 12.—The long expected trade to make Shortstop Joe Tinker of the Chicago National league club manager of the Cincinnati team, was effected at the close of the National league's annual meeting.

Would Stay Execution.

Portland, Ore., Dec. 12.—A statewide crusade to bring citizens from all parts of Oregon to Salem on Thursday, to demand that Governor West reprieve the five murderers doomed to die Friday, has been started.

SENATOR W. P. JACKSON

William P. Jackson, Republican national committeeman for Maryland, who was appointed by the governor to serve out the unexpired term of United States Senator Isidor Rayner.

QUESTIONED AS TO KNOWLEDGE

WITNESS TELLS OF DOINGS AFTER McNAMARAS, ARREST.

Detroit Man Held to Grand Jury on the Charge of Perjury.

Indianapolis, Dec. 12.—Inquiry as to whether John J. McNamara's guilt after his arrest and before he pleaded guilty to causing explosions was known to President Frank M. Ryan and other officials of the Iron Workers union was pursued by the government in its cross-examination of defendants at the dynamite conspiracy trial.

Michael J. Cunnane, Philadelphia testified he took part in a public demonstration managed by labor unions in Philadelphia as a protest against McNamara's arrest and then he assisted in raising the $200,000 defense fund for the McNamara brothers. He also stated he wrote letters to J. J. McNamara after the latter was confined in jail in Los Angeles, Cal. He said he was unable to recall the contents of this correspondence, but he would send to Philadelphia and produce the letters in court.

"Did you believe, after McNamara was taken to California and charged with murder and before he pleaded guilty to dynamiting that Ryan and Hockin had any knowledge as to his guilt or innocence?"

"I believed so then."

"Do you believe now that they had that knowledge then?" Judge Anderson asked.

"No: I don't now believe they did."

William E. Quigley, Detroit, of the International Association of Joiners and Carpenters, who was held to the January session of the federal grand jury on the governor's charge that he committed "wilful and malicious perjury," as a witness for the defense was later released on $2,000 bond Quigley is not a defendant at the trial

$200,000 ST. PAUL FIRE.

Heart of Business District Threatened in Disastrous Blaze.

St. Paul, Dec. 12.—The heart of the business center of St. Paul was threatened by a fire in McArthur's department store which resulted in a loss estimated at $200,000 on the building and contents.

The store is peculiarly arranged. It has a frontage of 150 feet on Seventh street by 100 feet deep and turns in an arcade angle toward Minnesota street where there is a 70-foot frontage. This arrangement made the work of confining the fire to the store a difficult problem.

The only accident that ocurred was to Fire Captain Jack Flannigan, brother of Acting Chief of Police Martin Flannigan, who sprained his right wrist soon after the fire apparatus arrived.

$400,000,000 Crop Raised in Iowa.

Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 12. — That Iowa raised almost $400,000,000 worth of crops last year is the statement of George Chappell, director of the Iowa weather and crop service. His figures of the total value of crops in the state is $397,227,208. Corn leads in this valuation with 421,368,000 bushels, worth $151,698,624. Oats is second with 206,949,700 bushels, worth $55,876,419. Hay is a close third with 5,859,040 tons, valued at $65,275,723.

Frank Chance Elated.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 12.—Frank Chance said here that he would be delighted to join the New York Americans. He declared he knew of no team with which he would rather play. He is slated to manage the highlanders.

Assay Office Out of Funds.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 12.—The assay office here must cease operations because there is no longer a government appropriation for its maintenance.

In Minnesota.

Important Happenings of the Week Briefly Told.

Virginia.—John Mackes, 12 years old, choked to death on a piece of chewing gum.

St. Cloud.—Sam Hayward, a Stearns county farmer, has lost 100 hogs out of a drove of 150. Cholera was the cause.

Stillwater.—Robert Taylor, a boy, was sentenced to the reformatory for a statutory crime. His home is at White Bear.

Stillwater.—James J. Coyne, representing the Duluth Casualty company, was arrested here on a charge of issuing fraudulent accident insurance policies.

Virginia.—On the ground that John Bannon, a hunter, "looked like a moose" when he was shot and killed by John Maki ten days ago, Maki was released.

Lake Crystal.—E. J. Roberts, an old resident, dropped dead while unharnessing a horse. He was 45 and leaves a wife, four sons and two daughters.

Minneapolis.—The University of Minnesota has purchased a motion picture camera. It is planned to make it play an important part in the college curriculum.

Chicago, Dec. 9.—White and Smith, stock raisers of St. Cloud, Minn., won the blue ribbon for the best cow of any age in the international livestock exposition here.

Minneapolis. — A class of 40 was given the degree at the Shrine ceremonial in the Masonic Temple in the presence of Imperial Potentate W. J. Cunningham of St. Louis.

Albert Lea.—The Knights of Columbus have arranged for a special train over the Milwaukee road to Austin Sunday. The occasion is the initiation of a large class by the Austin Knights.

Blue Earth.—The special grand jury in the case of the State vs. Harry W. Parker, charged with embezzlement of funds of the Bank of Commerce, Winnebago, to the sum of $20,000, brought in an indictment charging Parker with grand larceny in the first degree.

Detroit.—James McDowell, a former resident of Becker county, who was killed near Bandon, Ore., last week by his engine falling through a trestle 100 feet high, was buried here under the auspices of Lakeside lodge, I. O. O. F. He was engineer of a logging road. His engine broke through the trestle and the boiler exploded.

St. Paul.—The Minnesota Canners' Association will hold its annual meeting at the old Capitol on December 12 and 13. The officers conferred with Joel G. Winkjer, state dairy and food commissioner. "The industry is in a healthy condition in the state," said Mr. Winkjer. "The program will be devoted to general discussions. No exhibit will be held this year."

Willmar.—The West Central Minnesota Development Association meeting at Willmar on Friday and Saturday is the first of a series of three meetings to be held this winter at representative points in the district. The object is to promote co-operation in west central Minnesota development. Bankers, commercial clubs, farm clubs, editors, agricultural societies, creameries, land companies are urged to have delegates in attendance.

Anoka. — The Royal Neighbors of America elected officers for the year as follows: P. O., Mrs. Robert Richardson; O., Mrs. P. J. Nelson; V. O., Mrs. Guy Goodrich; C., Mrs. D. D. Cronkhite; Rec., Mrs. Dora Hollis; Rec'v., Mrs. Myrtle Downs; M., Miss Zilpah Redding; I. S., Mrs. Pearl Harmon; O. S., Mrs. Mabel Byson; manager, Mrs. Louis Laundry; physician, Dr. J. F. Kline. Mrs. Alden Kimball of Champlin will be the installing officer.

St. Paul.—The federal crusade against those engaged in the practice of promoting race suicide resulted in the sentence of Mrs. Ernestina Ash, midwife, by Judge Page Morris to six months in the Ramsey county jail. Mrs. Ash, who pleaded guilty to the charge of sending a letter through the mails regarding an illegal operation, stood before the judge alone and without counsel. She told the court that she did not wish her relatives to know anything about her disgrace.

Mankato.—The state rested in the trial of Charles Pollei on the charge of murder in the second degree for the shooting of Hubert Haack, a North Mankato young man, while the latter was attempting to escape from Pollei, who was at the time a police officer of this city. Much of the evidence produced by the state turned out to be useful to the defense. The latter has just opened its case to the jury. It seeks to show that the ball that killed Haack may have been fired by some person celebrating the Fourth of July, but that if it was from Pollei's weapon it probably glanced on the pavement or some other object before it struck the fleeing man.

Minneapolis, Dec. 10.—The action of the board of education in permitting dancing in the high schools was condemned by Minneapolis ministers in four denominational meetings. Representatives from the denominational meetings then gathered at Dayton's tea rooms and ratified the action taken by the respective bodies. A resolution was passed asking the board to defer its action until the ministers could be given a proper hearing.

Duluth.—Thomas James, a negro, was found guilty of second degree murder. He killed Rudolph Miller in a saloon brawl.

OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD

Representative Underwood, leader of the house, says the Democrats are going to revise the tariff "from agate to zinc."

SENATE TO DECIDE FINALLY

WILL SAY WHAT'S WHAT IN PANAMA WRANGLE.

Many Solons Believe Question Is Purely Domestic and, Therefore, Not Arbitrable.

Washington, Dec. 11. — Whether Great Britain's protest against free passage of American ships through the Panama canal is to be submitted to The Hague is to be finally determined by the senate, in any event.

It was intimated that President Taft consistent with his attitude as a principal champion of arbitration of disputes between nations, might recommend such a course, should he and Secretary Knox not hold the question a purely domestic and internal one, and therefore not arbitrable. There is a considerable leaning to such a view among senators.

The British government's note was discussed informally by President Taft and his cabinet yesterday but it was said until Secretary Knox had time to study it at length, and probably had outlined his reply, it would not be taken up formally. That probably will not be for several weeks.

A suggestion that the question might be kept from arbitration by delay until the existing arbitration treaty with Great Britain expires by limitation next June was repudiated by a number of senators.

Senator Lodge, a prominent member of the foreign relations committee, declared that "the United States would not stoop to tricks."

Senator Sutherland declared the question purely a domestic one and therefore not subject to arbitration.

ARCHBOLD DENOUNCED.

Boland Says He Planned to Catch Jurist.

Washington, Dec. 11.—William P. Boland of Scranton, Pa., the man charged by Judge Robert W. Archbold of the commerce court with having organized a conspiracy that resulted in Judge Archbald's impeachment and his present trial before the senate, admitted on the witness stand in the senate that he had suggested the various steps by which Judge Archbald was connected with the deal for the Katydid refuse coal dump, in order "to check up Judge Archbald."

"I wanted to button up Judge Archbald," he said, shaking his finger at the accused jurist who sat in front of him. "I wanted to show he was the kind of a man he is."

Two Given Life Sentence.

Superior, Wis., Dec. 11.—Robert Bennett, 19 years old, and George Shafer, 21, were sentenced to life imprisonment in the state penitentiary at Waupun for the murder of Henry Tuttle, a homesteader, three weeks ago.

Parker Indicted.

Blue Earth, Minn., Dec. 11.—The grand jury in the case of the State vs. Harry W. Parker, charged with embezzlement of funds of the Bank of Commerce, Winnebago, to the sum of $20,000, brought in an indictment charging Parker with grand larceny in the first degree.

Unknown Boat Sinks.

Devonport, Eng., Dec. 11. — The British battleship Centurion collided with and sank an unknown steamer off this port.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

APPLE PROSPECTS BRIGHT

New York Expert Says Minnesota Will Rank With Best Producing Communities.

St. Paul.—Minnesota as an apple state has as bright prospects before it as any of the states of the Union, according to George T. Powell, president of the Agricultural Expert association and the fruit expert of New York state, who spoke before the Minnesota State Horticultural society. Mr. Powell is owner of 160 acres of land in Columbia county, New York, on which he has 10,000 fruit trees, one of the few orchards of its kind in the United States. Ordinarily these trees, would cover 200 acres.

"On the Wealthy apple,' said Mr. Powell, "Minnesota will realize millions of dollars. It is one of the finest in existence and under the right culture will make the state famous. The future demands an apple of quality, rather than color and size, and the Wealthy is of the very best of flavors. Minnesota has the greatest of possibilities, but must produce a tree adapted to its climate and a little work with the Wealthy will do this."

Mr. Powell gave the horticulturists the advice he has gained from years of investigation. He said he saw no reason why Minnesota, with proper attention, could not forge ahead of all. He termed Minnesota an "empire."

The necessity of organization to market Minnesota fruit was the principal argument in the speech of A. D. Wilson of the farm school. He said that Minnesota has the fruit and the acreage and all that it lacks is organization. Following him, K. A. Kirkpatrick, first manager of the Minnesota Fruit association, told of the growth of that organization.

State inspection of orchards, nurseries and the products was the keynote of the speech by Prof. F. L. Washburn, state inspector of nurseries, who declared that higher quality and larger quantity will result from thorough inspection.

MAY CRITICISE BANK DEPARTMENT.

Rumors Are That Severe Strictures May Be Made As Result of Arrest of H. W. Parker.

Blue Earth.—As a result of the arrest and indictment of H. W. Parker, vice-president and cashier, and President John Sharp, of the State Bank of Commerce of Winnebago, it is rumored that severe criticism of the state banking department, of which Kelsey Chase, of Faribault, is the head, may develop at the trial of the two bank officials.

Just what form this criticism will take, has not been made public.

The special grand jury, called by Judge James H. Quinn, judge for the Seventeenth Judicial District, convened at the Faribault county court house at 2 p. m. An indictment was returned against Harry W. Parker, former vice-president of the State Bank of Commerce of Winnebago.

Mr. Parker was charged with embezzling $2,000 from the bank on April 26, 1912. Mr. Parker previously admitted the charge, and the result of the grand jury's action was anticipated. Mr. Parker cashed a draft at the First National Bank of Winnebago on April 26. The draft was drawn on a Chicago bank. He then took the $2,000 and disappeared. He was not heard from again until he was arrested at West Point, Ga., Thanksgiving day. Mr. Parker was brought back to Faribault county Friday.

Mrs. Parker, her sons, Dean and Donald, and her daughter Helen, drove to Blue Earth this morning to visit Mr. Parker at the jail. Mr. and Mrs. Parker are entirely reconciled.

START HARVESTER SUIT.

Evidence Being Heard by Special Examiner in Fight by Government.

St. Paul. — Taking of testimony in the government's suit to dissolve the International Harvester company was begun here. The government will be represented by Edwin P. Grosvenor, special assistant to Attorney General Wickersham, and Joseph R. Darling, special agent of the department of justice. The Harvester company's attorneys are Judge William D. McHugh, chief counsel; Edgar A. Bancroft, John P. Wilson, Judge Philip S. Post and E. A. Stillwell. The hearing will be before Robert S. Taylor, special examiner.

Witnesses to be examined at the hearing in St. Paul will be from Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri.

Select Trio to Lobby.

St. Paul.—Northern Minnesota reapportionment advocates will keep a trio of men familiar with politics in St. Paul during a part of the coming legislative session to work for the passage of a reapportionment bill. They are: E. C. Kiley, of Grand Rapids, editor of the Herald-Review and a Democratic candidate for the legislature at the last election; F. J. McPartlin, International Falls attorney, and A. H. Vernon, of Little Falls, former chief clerk of the house. Their expenses will be paid.

FIND HUMAN SKELETON.

Mystery in Disappearance of Peter Howe a Year Ago Cleared Up.

Jackson.—While hunting in Sioux Valley township, two farmer boys, looking for a prairie chicken that had fallen in some tall grass, found the skeleton of a man near the center of an eighty-acre slough. Sheriff Henry Ter Haar of this place was notified and went to the place, and satisfied himself that the remains were those of Peter Howe, who disappeared in that locality a year ago, while riding in an automobile with some friends. These men reported that he suddenly left the car and disappeared in the darkness, and that they had failed to find him.

Howe was a blacksmith at Montgomery, Iowa, close to the state line, and on Nov. 10, 1911, drove with two companions through Sioux Valley township to collect some accounts due from farmers. The trio stopped at a saloon at Sioux Valley and drank freely until 8 p. m., when they started for home. Howe soon complained of feeling cold and said he wanted to change from the front to the rear seat of the auto. He stepped out of the machine, and from that moment he disappeared as completely as though he had been swallowed by the earth. The evening was dark and foggy, and his companions called and searched for him in vain. Neighbors were aroused and the hunt continued until midnight.

The next day the Woodmen lodge at Montgomery turned out and hunted all day, he being a member of the lodge. Skunk lake, close at hand, was dragged. Howe's companions were closely questioned and placed under surveillance for some time, but not the slightest suspicious evidence was found against them.

SPLIT AMONG STUDENTS.

University Men's Opinions Divided Over Honor System.

Minneapolis.—The student body of the University of Minnesota are divided over the question whether the so-called "honor system" in examinations should be inaugurated in the institution.

Some have expressed themselves against it altogether, many have said they favored all but one part of it—that which requires students to report violations by other students; and one student has said that he believes there was "a sentiment against any form of student self-government in high administration circles of the university that it would be very hard to buck."

ASLEEP; WALKS ABOUT.

Clad Lightly, Man Roams All Night in Cold—Friends Fail to Find Him.

Red Wing.—To wander aimlessly through the woods and cross swamplands a distance of six or seven miles in the vicinity of Frontenac while asleep, and to be exposed to the piercing cold weather for several hours before he was awakened, was the thrilling experience of E. Roy Engstrom.

The young man roamed about the woods practically all night while people from Red Wing and Frontenac searched in vain for him.

His face was slightly scratched when he walked through the heavy brush but otherwise he was not injured. He returned to Red Wing on the passenger train from Frontenac.

Will Hold Extension Meeting.

Redwood Falls.—The high school agricultural department is holding a series of extension meetings to be held in the surrounding country, December 9 to 13, inclusive. These meetings are to be in the nature of farmers' institutes.

Otto Mesenbring will be here from state extension department, and will discuss topics relating to dairy conditions and the best methods of feeding. He will give demonstrations of milk and cream testing, a phase of farming that is expected to prove highly interesting to agriculturists in this vicinity. These meetings are entirely free.

Criticism An Old Story.

Blue Earth.—When informed that criticism of the state banking department might develop at the trial of H. W. Parker and John Sharp, of the State Bank of Commerce of Winnebago, Kelsey Chase, state superintendent of banks, said: "It is a well known practice for men accused of crime to attempt to discredit officials engaged in enforcing laws by bringing fictitious charges."

Trapper Dies of Shot Wounds.

Aurora.—John Mylyla, the old trapper who was mistaken and thought a wolf and shot last Monday near Birch Lake by Mark Elliott, Jr., of Virginia, Minn., son of the superintendent of the Interstate Mining company is dead at the Aurora hospital.

Holstein Cattle for Farmers.

Graceville.—A. R. Lathrop, county agricultural agent for Big Stone county, has just completed arrangements for a public sale of registered and high grade Holstein cattle.

NEW YORK IS HEADQUARTERS

SELECTION REGARDED AS VICTORY FOR PERKINS.

Publicity and Legislative Bureaus Established in Washington.

Chicago, Dec. 12.—New York was selected as the permanent headquarters of the executive committee of the new Progressive party after a fight in which delegates to the National Progressive conference from several states sought to have the headquarters located elsewhere. The vote on this question stood 32 to 12. Chief opposition to the selection of New York as the location of permanent headquarters came from Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Louisiana, Texas and Wyoming.

Members of the national executive committee from Ohio, Wisconsin Michigan, Illinois, New Hampshire and Montana voted against the resolution, naming New York because they said the resolution was not sufficiently comprehensive. They desired the resolution to provide for things in addition to a national headquarters.

By a number of the delegates to the conference the selection of New York was received as a victory for George W. Perkins and his friends, against whom some opposition had been developed in the conference.

In addition to the selection of New York as the location of headquarters for the national executive committee, it was decided to establish a permanent publicity bureau and a permanent legislative bureau at Washington.

Also, the executive committee voted to send a commission to Europe to study legislation in England, Germany and other countries for the purpose of getting material and ideas for the Washington legislative bureau. United States Senator Joseph M. Dixon of Montana, chairman of the executive committee, was empowered to name this commission of seven members. He announced that he would appoint Medill McCormick and Dr. Walter E. Weyl as two of the members of this commission.

Further, the executive committee adopted the principles contained in the Jane Addams plan for the organization and financing of the Progressive campaign. The Addams plan was not adopted in its entirety because it was believed to be too large an undertaking at this time.

For the immediate financing of headquarters and bureaus, it was decided to ask for 100 subscriptions of $500 each a year. Six of these, totalling $3,000, have already been subscribed. They came from the state organizations of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Michigan, Vermont, Delaware and Pennsylvania. It is proposed to get 42 more of these $500 subscriptions from the remaining state organizations and secure the rest from individuals within the Progressive party.

Matthew Hale of Massachusetts announced that he would guarantee $1,000 per year for financing the work of the headquarters and bureau.

Frisco Fair Sites Chosen.

San Francisco, Dec. 12.—A gun salute from the artillery at the Presidio and the United States ship Marblehead, at anchor in the bay, was fired when the commissioners from the Netherlands and from the state of Minnesota selected their sites on the grounds of the Panama-Pacific International exposition. Thousands of natives of the country across the Atlantic and the northwestern states attended the site selection ceremonies.

Hog receipts, 48,000; market dull, 10c to 15c under yesterday's general range; light, $7.10@7.45; mixed, $7.15@7.55; heavy, $7.15@7.55; rough, $7.15@7.30; pigs, $5@7; bulk of sales, $7.40@7.55. Sheep receipts, 35,000; market strong to 10c higher; native, $4@5; western, $4.20@5; yearlings, $5.40@6.75; lambs, native, $6.30@8.15; western, $6.30@8.15.

Chicago Grain.

Chicago, Dec. 12.—Lightness of offerings brought about a firm feeling today in wheat. Pit traders were playing for a rally but not much new buying power developed. Low temperatures northwest helped the bulls. The opening was a shade to ⅛c higher. May started at 89⅛@89¼c, an advance of a sixteenth to ⅛@¼c, and rose to 89⅛@89⅜c.

Higher closing figures at Liverpool caused a further upturn. Wall Street weakness, however, led to a break. The close was steady with May ⅛@¼c net over 89⅛c.

Reports that farmers were not selling freely except in some sections of Iowa, strengthened corn. May opened a shade off to ⅛c up at 48⅛c to 48⅜@48½c, and mounted to 48⅝@48¾c.

Afterward longs unloading were responsible for a setback. The close, however, was firm at 48¼@48⅜c for May, the same as last night.

Montana Wheat Wins.

Minneapolis, Dec. 12.—The $5,000 prize for the best five bushels of wheat grown in the American northwest during 1912 and exhibited at the Minneapolis land show was awarded to Joseph P. Nash and Charles Bridgeman, partners, whose wheat farm is in the Shields valley of Montana, seventy miles north of Yellowstone park. The wheat is "turkey red," weighs a few ounces more than 60 pounds to the bushel, yielded 59½ bushels to the acre.

The SPIRIT of CHRISTMAS

Columbine.

ON the left, just past the weather hen's nest, and not more than two steps from the box where they keep the cuckoo, there is the long bed where roses bloom all the year round. And they grow like this so that Columbine may always have one to stick in her hair, and that odd, mocking, soft-hearted cynic Pierrot may cull one now and again to twiddle between his teeth.

If you know the way, and the Cheshire cat will let you, you walk down the garden path, past the butterfly lime, and arrive at the neatest little cottage in Olympus.

Now this is the dwelling place of the Harlequin set—Harlequin, Columbine, Clown and Pantaloon. It is one cottage in a little colony on the lower slopes of Mount Olympus (where the high gods dwell: Jupiter and the like), and is most important because it contains the oldest inhabitants.

The Clerk of the Weather lives a little higher up. The Four Queens and Kings live in a square of pagoda-like houses, and are waited upon by the Knaves. Pierrot and Pierrette live in romantic seclusion by a pool in a tumble-down place covered with blue roses. And away behind the fields of stars where the flocks of clouds graze, there is another village where the Seven Princesses live, and the Third Son and an Ogre, and a Talking Rabbit, and all those peculiar and beautiful people who are entangled in our minds with the memories of night nurseries, and the scent of our mothers who bent over us in wonderful toilettes, and told us to go to sleep, or they'd be late for dinner.

When it gets to be about Christmas there is a sort of aroma of excitement on the lower slopes of Olympus, and, especially in the house where Harlequin lives—a delicious sense of something exciting happening.

Columbine opens the lid of the well that looks down onto the world, and there comes up a murmur of children's voices, and you can hear the quaintest things being said about the hanging up of stockings, and about Santa Claus and the likely width of chimneys, and the running power of reindeer. And there is a tremendous rustle of colored paper, and a great run on almonds and raisins, and quite respectable citizens stand in front of shop windows gazing at dolls and dolls gaze back at them, so that the citizens go back forty years at a rush, and the rush is so great sometimes that they get tears in their eyes; for memory is quicker than motor cars, and the road it travels is often dark and broken.

So Columbine leaves the top of the well open all day and all night, and all the people in her cottage sleep with their windows open, so that the sweetly laden air comes up and gives them wonderful dreams. It does more than that. It waves the branches of the Christmas tree that grows at the bottom of the garden, near the sausage frames, and very soon candles begin to bud on its branches.

Now when the candles begin to get ripe, which happens at the same time that geese and turkeys hang in rows in shops and grow rosettes all over them, Harlequin takes an old, oaken pipe from a cupboard under the stairs, and they all sit round while he puts it to his lips and blows.

As he plays, dreams come to them of their ancient days, for Harlequin is first cousin to Mercury, and wears a black mask to hide the light of his face when he visits Columbine, who is Psyche, the Soul; the Clown is Momus, the Spirit of Laughter; and Pantaloon is Charon, who has that grim work of ferrying the souls over the Styx.

There's an odd link of memories and of things held all through the centuries, but the most charming is this: Columbine is a flower-like person, and there is a flower called Columbine, and it is so called because it is like four doves with outspread wings, and the French dove is colombe, and the dove is the symbol of the soul. So the world is never allowed to forget beautiful things, even if the burden of history is borne on the back of a flower. And the god-like glow and glitter of Mercury's limbs still shows in the glistening sequins on Harlequin's clothes, parti-colored as they have always been, to show how he covered his nakedness with rags.

All this, beautified by the essence of Time, like things put away in a cedar chest, comes back when Harlequin blows on his pipe that air the shepherds learnt in Greece from Pan.

The next night Clown will take out another kind of pipe, a long churchwarden of white clay, and fill it with tobacco, and then as the fragrant clouds roll up into the rafters, memories come of all the great people of the Harlequinades they play down in the world, all inspired by them, and they see the figure of Tarlaton, who was the first clown, and invented the very clothes they now wear, hand in hand with Grimaldi, that great clown. And they seem to see all the great Italian Harlequins, and the dainty French Columbines, and the old dandies of fifteenth-century Venice whose clothes Pantaloon wears.

Do you know that elderly gentlemen in the World smell that magic tobacco, or something like it, and they forget their paunches, or their bald heads, and they sit and dream of the time they went to their first pantomime? Was it "Cinderella," or "Beauty and the Beast"? Or was it that splendid thing "Mother Goose," or that entrancing production "The Yellow Dwarf"?

Pantaloon.

Such things are conjured up by just that one pipe of tobacco smoked in the cottage on Olympus, and on that night a gentle breeze blows up through the well, laden with the poignant, eternal memories of childhood, and the candles on the Christmas tree are all ready to be lighted. They are so ready that when Pantaloon looks out of his window before making up his face for the day he sees that the candles have burst into flame-flowers in the night.

Then Columbine takes out a pipe, and she puts some magic soap into nectar and stirs it round with the bowl of the pipe until frothy suds appear. And then she blows bubbles that float up and out of the window until they reach the Christmas tree, when they turn into great, glittering glass balls, all sorts of colors, and show pictures of the world all colored and shining.

The children in the World look up and think they see Harlequin and Columbine floating down as gently as feathers, but they don't say so because their elders would only tell them it was the clouds. But it is Harlequin and Columbine, and Pantaloon end Clown follow soon after, bringing the Christmas tree with them.

Pierrette.

Now their work begins, each to his own job and Columbine to hers. Clown to preparing the laughter that must spring up in this season, and ripple as easily as a barley field in a breeze. Harlequin to his magic. for common things must appear beautiful now, and a penny must buy the wealth of the Indies. And Pantaloon to stirring up old memories in dull people, so that uncles must remember all their nephews in remembering when they were nephews themselves, and had a peculiar hunger at Christmas.

Columbine is awfully practical. Her sentiment extends from the joy of watching the making of baby-clothes to the pleasure of remembering to put nice soap in the spare rooms. It is she who sees that children get the right presents, and when they don't it is not her fault, but the fault of some stupid person in a shop.

It is she who suggests the secret delight of keeping presents hidden at the bottom of the wardrobe; and it is she who suggests the secret delight of peering at children when they are asleep.

Merry Christmas to YOU!

There are Pagan Saints who find Arcadia everywhere. Pan pipes as much in the crowded city as on Mount Ida when the sun is high. And Columbine finds roses where the world sees thorns; and Harlequin finds magic in motor 'buses; and Pantaloon digs up for pleasant memories in the most unlikely places, and finds them bright and clean, and as good as new.

These half-gods of mine (and yours) come down at Christmas to correct the bilious attitude of the rest of the year. They come to sow those seeds that grow to flowers in the still innocent hearts. They are the influence that makes you give a man fifty cents instead of a quarter. And the being who says that the business of life weighs more than the sentiment had better hang up his stocking on Christmas Eve, and see what it feels like to find nothing but a hole in it in the morning.

Pierrot.

And when it is dark these four quaint figures flit through the country, city, town and village like conspirators, Harlequin tapping doors and windows with his magic wand. "Open, open!" he cries to the Spirit of Christmas. "Let the rich uncle reward his needy nephew, and the unforgiving father his repentant son. Mothers, forget to be jealous of your elder daughter's growing beauty. Children, forget your spite and naughtiness. Let's be old-fashioned. Let's believe in ghosts. I'll tell you ghost-stories, stories of yourselves when you were children and played Pirates on the stairs.

And Clown says as he taps on the doors with his red-hot poker:

"Open, open, you old grousers! And let the Spirit of Fun come into this house. Romp a bit, and lose your twopenny dignity, for pompous stiffness makes the gods laugh."

Pantaloon, taking his turn, taps with his walking-stick, and says:

"Open, open, and let in the flood of memories of the good old times! Holly and mistletoe and robins, and church bells sounding over the snow. And hampers all packed to be sent away, and plenty to eat at home.

Harlequin.

And then Columbine steals up to the windows, and taps them with the rose from her hair, and she whispers:

"Open, open to me all you who have no children and no friends and no hope, and I will be the warm, nestling thing you covet for your frozen hearts, and you shall feel my soft cheek against yours till the tears come and your heart takes life again. You shall give joy to other people's children. And if you have no friends who have children, are there not a thousand, thousand children who have no friends? Go to them, and give them all you can, and you will be rewarded almost more than you can bear, for there is a link between those who suffer. Are there not some you have forgotten or neglected? This lonely man, that lonely woman whom you have left uncared for, perhaps for years. Put on your hat and your coat, and put your heart on your sleeve, so that all may know your errand."

To see her pleading before black, sombre houses where a thin light shines under a blind; to see her face pressed against the window of some big mansion where a man or a woman sits alone with hearts like stone; to see her tears as she essays to melt an aching heart is to see something so touching and beautiful that one almost wonders the doors and windows are not instantly opened to admit the spirit of love she begs for so pitifully.

"Look at yourselves, Messieurs et Mesdames Importance, and remember the funny little things you used to be when you bit at coral and bells, and wore bibs, and thought everybody in the world had enough to eat; when you hated to go to bed early, and crept downstairs in your night-gowns to listen over the bannisters to the voices in the dining room; when no jam for tea was a tragedy. And when your mother's knee was the throne of justice and mercy, for you buried your head there with her hand in your hair, and forgot to be afraid of the dark."

Columbine has her own very particular work, and she calls it in her mind Secret Delights. She calls it that because she delights in making up odd names for emotions, as, for instance, when she pointed out two lovers to me one day in the spring, who were seated under a hedge, yellow-flushed with primroses; they were holding hands and looking at the hills beyond just as if some wonderful thing was about to come over the hills to tell them what their feelings meant. And the peace was so great and the moment so held that the World seemed to have stopped breathing, and something superhuman to have poured out a cup of stillness. And she called it Liquid Velvet. A Liquid Velvet moment. And I understood.

It is Columbine who watches that beautiful comedy of the newly married, who steal about their house hand-in-hand, fearful of waking the very new servants, fearful of creaking the boards as they gaze enraptured on the very new furniture, looking with joy on the very new pots and pans in the kitchen, turning the electric lights up and down all over the place to see the effect in their new bedroom. And he has a dreadful brooch for her hidden where he keeps his razors; and she has knitted him a tie he will have to wear. But it is all perfectly beautiful.

Someone wrote the other day that people who read are more interested, nowadays, in business than in love, and I'm so sorry for that man. He is more blind than I thought anybody could be. Business may be the means to an end, but Love is the beginning and the end. And it is just at this season that Love makes business: hence the shops full of gifts. Imagine a poet writing:

"Cent. per cent. the moon is rising,
Watch the stocks upon the bank;
Rubber shares are too surprising,
Speculators are surmising
Who the deuce they have to thank!"

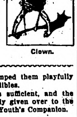
No one can get a heartbeat out of that, and whatever your business man says, he knows he gets all the good in his life out of heartbeats.

So this Christmas Spirit creeps about the world, mocked at, scorned, but alive yet. And you who feel these things may one night see this quaint quartet at work, perhaps for a second at the corner of your street, perhaps just vanishing down the drive, or moving swiftly down a country lane. And you may say wonderingly: "It is a cobweb, a moth, and the branch of a tree, and the starlight makes them look like—like something I remember."

But I tell you who they are—Harlequin, Columbine, Clown and Pantaloon. And if you hear a child's laugh ring out suddenly, and it brings a new, quick emotion, one of them has conquered you!

The spirit of Christmas doesn't cling to presents in proportion to their cost—unless you are very rich; and if you are very rich the voice of the jeweler and of the furrier and of the motor car maker will seem to you as wise as the word of a happy poor man, though he were a philosopher.

Simple and genuine and glad—strike these notes and the chimes will be very melodiously for you and for those whom you try to make happy. And remember, you can't feign Christmas without being caught as an impostor, both by your own conscience and by the feelings of those about you. The very value of Christmas is that it puts the genuineness of everybody to an unerring test.



Clown.

RECOVERING A FALCON

A curious story about a falcon is told in "Game Birds and Wild Fowls." A colonel in the English army on a visit to Canada took with him two peregrines. During the voyage across the Atlantic one was missed, and the owner made up his mind that it was irretrievably lost.

While in Halifax some weeks later, he happened to see in a newspaper a paragraph to the effect that an American schooner, just arrived in port, had on board a fine hawk that had come on board during the passage from Liverpool. It at once occurred to the colonel that it might be his falcon, and he lost no time in visiting the schooner.

The captain of the craft was inclined to doubt his story, but the colonel suggested that his claim to the ownership of the bird be put to a test. He was to be brought into the presence of the hawk, and if the bird was his he felt sure that it would show signs of recognition that would convince the bystanders that he was its owner. The trial was agreed upon, and the hawk was brought into the room.

The door was hardly opened before it darted for the shoulder of the colonel, and evinced by every means in its power its delight and affection. It rubbed its head softly against his cheek, and taking hold of the buttons of his coat, champed them playfully between its mandibles.

The proof was sufficient, and the bird was promptly given over to the rightful owner.—Youth's Companion.

Passed.

"Well, Binks," said Dobbleigh, "I see that they have just had their commencement up at your boy's college. How did he stand the examination of his mental luggage?"

"All right," said Binks, "they didn't find anything dutiable."

ODD SCOTCH CHURCH

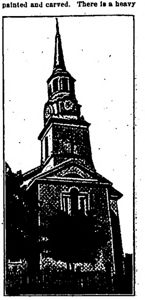
Greenock Edifice at St. Andrews, N. B., Erected in 1824.

Building Is Novelty in Construction—It Is Queerly Carved—Has a Large Double Decked Pulpit of Mahogany—Cost £500 in England.

Montreal.—At the quaint Canadian town of St. Andrews, N. B., 12 miles up the St. Croix river from Eastport, Me., is a novelty in church construction. Greenock church was erected in 1824. Its queerly carved and painted oak tree on the front of the bell tower can be seen from a considerable distance. Inside the church is a large double-decked pulpit of mahogany, with sounding-board on top and two flights of steps reaching the preacher's stand. It is protected with gates—and an inclosure of red curtains. It was brought out from England at a cost of £500.

At the time this Scotch church was erected the town was prosperous and the donor expected his congregation to pay yearly dues or taxes, but it is related that they neglected to attend to this. The story goes that one Sunday morning the donor mounted the pulpit and faced a large congregation; that he displayed a brace of loaded pistols which he fired into the air, and the frightened people rushed to their homes. The donor closed the church, pocketed the key, and said that when the churchgoers paid their dues they might have the church again.

The walls and the center of the church show decorations of large-sized Scotch thistles, handsomely painted and carved. There is a heavy old-fashioned lock on the front door and the massive, quaintly shaped iron key is kept in a wooden box on the ground near the entrance, where any visitor can find it and visit the church at all times.



Greenock Church at St. Andrews, N. B.

The church is less than two miles on the St. Croix river from where the world-famed Demonts island is located and where the celebrated French explorer Demont and his companion Champlain made a settlement in June, 1604, the first European settlement on the Atlantic coast, but it was only for part of a year.

FISH BITES INFECT HANDS

Ex-Senator Receives Them While Disengaging a Trout From Hook in Its Mouth.

Vancouver, Wash.—Bitten by a large rainbow trout, ex-Senator E. M. Rands of this city is suffering much from an infection on his hands.

Senator Rands was fishing at Interlaken, or Four Lakes, on the North Bank road, where he is one of several incorporators of a private fish and game preserve. He succeeded in landing a large rainbow trout and when he attempted to release the hook in its mouth, the fish closed its jaws on the senator's fingers and punctured the skin.

In trying to release his fingers Mr. Rands used his right hand and was also pricked on that member. Infection set in and now Mr. Rands is going around with both hands in bandages.

MOSCOW PUPILS BIG DRINKERS

Reports Show 66 Per Cent of Boys and 45 Per Cent of Girls Use Intoxicants.

Moscow.—According to official reports prepared by the Moscow town council, inebriety is rapidly increasing among Russian school children generally, but particularly in the Moscow district. Inquires show that 90 per cent of the adults addicted to drink acquired the habit while at school, and of 18,134 schoolboys between the ages of eight and thirteen, in the Moscow district, 12,152, or 66 per cent., have taken to drink. The percentage among girls of the same ages is scarcely less appalling, 4,733 out of 10,404, or 45 per cent.

Shocked to Death in Bed.

Rome.—Prof. Battista Polacchi, teacher of mathematics, and his wife, Cesira, were burned to death in bed by a strange mishap at their villa at Castellamare on the Adriatic. They were found next morning enveloped in electric flames, the husband in death throes, the wife charred to a cinder.

The bed was of iron and one of the posts leaned against the wall, touching the wire installation for lighting the apartment. An overhead trolley wire outside had become detached and fallen on the wire connecting with the professor's dwelling.

JUST WHO THIS SANTA PERSON IS

SANTA IN HIS WORKSHOP

SANTA IN HIS AEROPLANE

WHO is this grand old man, adored by every one, and where was he born? The answer is not easy, for Santa Claus was born ages ago and he has been so busy ever since that he never has taken the time to study his family tree. One thing he knows, and that is he has many names. American children call him Santa Claus, the little Dutch folk St. Nicholas, the French Pere Noel, and the Germans Prince Ruprecht or Kriss Kringle, but they all mean the same thing. The story of his birth is told in medieval legend. This Italian story says that his name was St. Nicholas and he was a bishop in the fourth century. He had a great deal of money, but he was so good to poor people, and especially to children, that he gave it away as fast as he got it. There are many tales about his good deeds, but perhaps the most interesting one is how he brought back to life three children who had been killed.

In Italy he was known as a tall man, dressed in white robes and wearing a crown. But the happy Dutch did not think of this kind man that way. To the Dutch people he always appeared as short-legged and pot-bellied and well wrapped in furs. He was accompanied by a black slave, who carried a bag full of sweets and presents. St. Nicholas carried a birch rod with him and asked the children who had been good and who had been bad. If they were good he gave them nuts, crackers and candies, but if they had been bad they got a flogging. The children put their wooden sabots in the open fireplace so he could put some more presents in these on going out.

In Russia he was worshiped the same way, but he always appeared as a tall person wearing the vestments of a bishop, with miter and [illegible]. His companion was a bearded man wearing a fur coat, carrying a stick and a basket full of presents.

There are many interesting legends associated with the name of St. Nicholas or Santa Claus in England. One is that he was put in prison for some unknown offense, but managed to escape. This is told in "An Hue and Cry After Christmas," and it tells of the arraignment, conviction and imprisonment of Christmas, and how he "broke out of prison in the holidays and got away, only leaving his hoary hair and gray beard sticking between two iron bars of a window."

In Germany he was at first considered as an advance courier for the Christkindlein, distributing part of the angel child's gifts and promising a visit of the Christkindlein on Christmas eve when he heard that the children were good. In some of the small places he appeared grotesquely—sometimes in goatskin and dancing like a goat, again in a white sheet with a stick and two lights in his mouth. The legend says that Claus, Nicholaus, Necht Ruprecht, or whatever his name is, "comes in wearing a white sheet and holding a stick in his hand." He tells the children to pray, and if they disobey he flogs them, but if they obey he gives them plenty of nuts and apples.

The Italian children also believed in their patron saint, but they worshiped his wife instead. Her name is La Befana and they pay as much homage to her as the other children do to the saint. She is not good looking, for she is supposed to be more than 2,000 years old. The legend says that when the three wise men were about to pass her window she refused to go to the window and salute them. She saw her mistake when it was too late, and has tried to repent by making the children of Italy happy on her birthday, which is the sixth of January. She is supposed to be Santa Claus' wife, and when she is not busy helping him she is in Italy getting ready for her yearly celebration, which takes place on the sixth of January, when she gives the children toys, fruits, candies, etc.

She is also known in Russia and a great many children believe in Mrs. instead of Mr. Santa Claus. There she is called Babouska, and the story tells that she is so kind because she is repenting of her sins.

When the Dutch came to America they brought their stories of their patron saint and their Christmas celebrations. And the children commenced to hang up their stockings instead of putting wooden shoes into the open fireplace. Their saint was the same kind, jovial man, excepting that he came with reindeer instead of driving horses as in Holland. The German children told their stories of the Christ child, who sent Prince Ruprecht as his servant to inquire into their behavior and to distribute their presents. They did not see a great deal of difference in the stories and so took the twenty-fifth of December as the day for Santa Claus' appearance.

In France it was the angel child who came every year to bless the children and to remember them with some small gift. Afterward he had so much to do he sent his servant, Pere Noel, which is the Santa Claus of the French and Dutch children, to help him distribute his gifts and to tell them that he will come to bless them before the New Year.

Though Santa Claus has a large sleigh and two splendid horses or reindeer, according to the countries he visits, he has such long distances to cover that he cannot appear in all countries on the same day. Santa Claus was born in Holland, or rather it took the Dutch children to find him. But he is a great traveler and goes to all countries, where he has many shops and thousands of men and women working for him. He goes to all the forests of Germany, especially to the wonderful "Black Forest," and gets thousands and thousands of trees.

But even the great forests of Germany cannot give him all the trees he needs, so he hurries to Russia and even to Sweden and Norway until he gets all he wants. He has many shops in London, Paris, Chicago, New York, and in many other cities. His great factories are in Nuremberg and in Switzerland, in the Bernese Oberland. Here he has many of the dolls, wooden toys and miniature watches made that go to all countries of the world.

By the time he reaches Germany the Christmas markets are emptied of their trees, which are always dressed awaiting his coming.

Then he takes a fast steamer to America, and by the time he lands in New York he is pretty well tired out. He always brings one or more servants with him and he has so many homes to visit that only a few of the children get to see him. He hurries in and out of the chimneys just as fast as he can.

He catches another steamer bound for France, where the children are awaiting their Pere Noel. Sometimes he is so late that the children have to celebrate their Christmas and New Year together. But his journey is not yet ended, for he goes back once more to Russia, especially into the interior, where he has not yet been. But he is the friend of all children and must therefore extend his journey into farthest Norway, and even into Iceland.

While he is busy with the children of the north his wife is looking after the children in the south, in Italy, Spain and Greece. At dark on the eve of Epiphany the Befana begins. The open squares are crowded with trees of all sizes, wax figures of the Christ child, candles and toys, while the air resounds with the sounds of whistles, horns and carols.

When these celebrations are finished Santa Claus and his wife go off for a short holiday, nobody knows exactly where. It is said that they have been seen in the high mountains of Switzerland enjoying the winter sports. Wherever they enjoy their holiday it is short, for as soon as they are rested they commence their work for the coming year.

This is only a part of the real Christmas legend, for Christmas would not be nearly as beautiful as it is were it not for the splendid evergreen trees, shimmering with their many brilliant candles and gay trimmings. The Dutch may boast that Santa Claus was born in Holland. Who knows? Perhaps he was. But Germany is the home of the Christmas tree, for it was the first country that used the evergreen tree in Christmas celebration, and it supplies more than one-half of the trees that are used by Santa Claus.

There are many beautiful stories associated with the origin of the first Christmas tree. One legend says that on the holy night all nature, even the animals and the trees, were rejoicing and that the cedars, instead of pointing their branches upward as pointed, slender trees, spread their branches wide to protect the mother and her new-born child. Though it was midwinter the thorn commenced to blossom and its white flowers made a cover for the child's cradle. The olive poured forth oil for the new-born child. All were happy except the small pine, which had nothing to offer, and year by year it grew taller. Still it never forgot that holy night and the wind sweeping through its branches moans because the pine is still unhappy because it had nothing to give.

YE CHRISTMAS FEAST.

Now all our neighbors' chimneys smoke,
And Christmas logs are burning;
Their ovens they with baked meats choke,
And all their spits are turning.
Without the door let sorrow lie,
And if by cold it hap to die,
We'll bury't in a Christmas pie,
And evermore be merry.

ORIGIN IN PAGAN RITES

Many Old Christmas Customs Have Been Handed Down From Ancient Times.

It is interesting to note that many of the Christmas customs which have endeared themselves to the people scattered all over the world have their origin in many cases among those ancient men and women who worshiped strange gods before they heard the message of peace brought to them by the early Christian fathers. The holly, the mistletoe, the wassail bowl, the Yule log, and the Christmas tree are remnants of old customs that have become amalgamated and modified into the usage of modern civilization.

The Druids of Great Britain, whom the Romans discovered there when they conquered the Celts, were a priesthood ruling the people by cruel witchcraft. They worshiped the oak, the mistletoe, and the holly. Their altars on their feast days were decorated with the branches of white and red berries.

When the early Christian fathers came over to Britain they found that it was easier to amalgamate the feast days of the pagans with their own customs and teachings than it was to eradicate them from the minds of the people who, like all men and women, loved their recreation days. The Christian missionaries merely changed the name of the feast of the winter solstice to that of Christmas, and so the people paid tribute in the old way to the new God, which, to their simple minds, was quite compatible.—National Monthly.

Dark Horse in Diplomacy.

Old Uncle Jack, who closely resembles Old Black Joe in that he ain't got no hair where the hair used to grow, has lived for several generations—he does not know exactly how many—in the service of a Virginia family. Last summer there were two babies in the house, and Uncle Jack, deserting for the moment the diplomacy and finesse which had always characterized him, committed the fatal blunder of saying that one child was prettier than the other. The aggrieved mother hunted up the old man and asked him what he meant by his remark.

"Lemme see your baby again," said Jack, evidently much disturbed.

This privilege was given him, and he stood for a long time silent and thoughtful before the child whom he had so grossly slandered. Finally he said, in a slow, critical manner:

"Well, I tell you, de yuther one is a little fatter den dis one, but dis here one is a leetle stouter."—Popular Magazine.

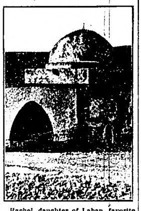
Things Queer and Curious

Sacred Crops in Japan

In the village of Isobe, in the Shima province of Japan, there are certain rice-fields which belong to the Izo-kyu Shrine, which claims a part of their yield, and these are the scene of a remarkable ceremony which takes place in no other part of the country. When the day comes for the young rice-shoots to be removed from the small beds in which the seeds were sown, and to be planted in rows, the villagers make holiday, that they may witness the ceremonious transplanting which is illustrated here. Young men and women, placed alternately, and wearing the dress of old Japan, surround the small beds of shoots, and uproot them, singing old songs the while. The shoots are then planted in rows in the sacred fields to the music of flutes.

WHERE RACHEL IS BURIED



Rachel, daughter of Laban, favorite wife of Jacob and mother of Benjamin, was interred at Bethlehem, according to tradition, and pious pilgrims to the Holy Land do not fail to visit the "Kubbet Rachil" or Tomb of Rachel, there. This structure actually dates only from the twelfth century, but presumably was erected on the site of an earlier tomb.

MEIJI'S FUNERAL TORTOISES

A curious custom was carried out in connection with the funeral of Emperor Meiji which was not made public at the time. This consisted in the freeing of three large tortoises as a mark of regret at the death of the emperor.

The shell of the largest specimen was three feet five inches long, and upon the shell were engraved the characters:

"We humbly beg to show our deepest regret at the death of our Meiji Tenno. Let free in the sea off Ogasawara island on the day of the state funeral, September 13, 1912. Hiroshi Abe, governor of Tokio.'

GIRL TOURS SHINING SHOES

Capitol officials in Montgomery, Ala., were surprised when a winsome young woman called and requested that she be permitted to shine their boots. She proved to be Miss Evelyn Altofair, originally of Nashville, Tenn., who started out from Mobile, six months ago on a "shoeshining" tour of the United States to win a wager of $1,500 and convince the world that a woman can do anything she sets her mind to.

Under the agreement she is to go into every state in the union, making her living throughout by blacking shoes.

DUCK MADE GOLD STRIKE

Miss Jennie Robinson of Pittsfield, Mass., has asked a marketman to find where a duck she bought at his place recently was raised. In the gizzard of the duck she found a lump of gold as large as a pea. Wherever the duck came from Miss Robinson believes there is more gold, and she intends to turn prospector.

ATTENDS SICK CALL BY AERO

The distinction of being the first clergyman to travel by aeroplane to minister to a dying man falls to Father Andral, a French priest serving with the troops in Morocco.

He was busy in the hospital at Laghouat when a young aeronaut, Lieutenant Bregard, entered his room and asked him if it were possible for him to come with him by aeroplane in order to give the sacrament to a dying officer who had been shot by the enemy. The two were heartily cheered by the soldiers when they descended in the French camp. The wounded man when told he must die had said: "To die is nothing, but to die without the consolations of religion is sad."

Lieutenant Bregard had bent down and whispered that he would fetch a priest by aeroplane. The dying man was still alive when the priest arrived. He made his confession and received the communion and a few minutes afterward died.

RABBIT HUNT NETS $133

A rabbit hunt on the outskirts of Great Notch, N. J., was brought to an unexpected ending at the base of an old apple tree into which the rabbit had sought shelter. Two hunters, John Lyons and Robert Dodd of Upper Montclair, had fired two shots at the little animal, and as the smoke cleared away saw their prize run into the hollow of the tree. As the hunters were preparing to smoke the rabbit out they discovered in the tree hollow a much worn pocketbook. It contained one $100 bill, five twos, three fives and eight one-dollar bills, all in fair condition.

HUNTS SHEEP, FINDS GOLD.

William Guest, former officer of the British army, discovered a gold quartz mine said to be worth $1,000,000 or more because, while hunting, he climbed a mountain after the sheep and returning down hill he found a quartz body of great size, carrying high gold values. The first two carloads of surface ore received at the Tacoma smelter gave returns of $65 a ton. Captain Guest went on his sheep hunt last spring. Since then he has kept 14 men at work installing a tramway to carry ore.

NO FEMALES ALLOWED HERE

For thousands of years Mount Athos, the monastery-covered eminence on one projection of the Chalcidice peninsula, in the Aegean sea, has been a center of religious activity. Centuries before the beginning of the Christian era a sanctuary of Zeus (Jupiter) stood on the mountain. It is the mountain that the architect Dinocrates offered to turn into a statue of Alexander the Great with a city in one hand and in the other a perennially flowing spring.

Its chief modern interest lies in the fact that at least since the beginning of the middle ages it has been the home of a little monastic republic that still retains almost the same autonomy granted a thousand years ago by the Christian emperors of Constantinople. In 1905 the many fortified monasteries and hermitages on Mount Athos contained 7,553 monks, including Greeks, Russians, Bulgarians, Roumanians, Georgians and Servians. The domestic government of the monasteries was regulated in 1046 by Constantine Monomachos, with the aid of the patriarch of Constantinople. By the imperial document which he issued women are forbidden on the peninsula, a prohibition so strictly observed that even the Turkish aga, or official, who resides at Karyaes, may not take his harem with him. To such an extent is this prohibition carried that even the females of animals are not permitted on the peninsula. On occasions when women are forced to land there in storms they are at once placed in huts and sent away at the first opportunity.

The Paleologi emperors at Constantinople and the Slav princes of the Balkan peninsula enriched the monasteries of Mount Athos. Occasionally a Byzantine emperor took refuge there from the cares of state. Amid the political disasters of the Greeks during the fourteenth century Mount Athos appears as a kind of holy land, a place where the Hellenic spirit was cherished when it was threatened elsewhere, and even today it is one of the most sacred pilgrimage sites of the entire Greek church and the feasts of the principal monasteries are always celebrated with great pomp.

The fall of Constantinople in 1453 brought no modification of the conditions on the holy mountain. The monks, who stubbornly opposed all attempts at reconciliation with the church of Rome, submitted at once to the domination of the Osmanli and, with rare exceptions, have never been interfered with by the Turkish authorities.

As a general rule the monks hold their property in common. They are divided into two classes, the "idiorhythmic" and the "cenobitic." The latter lives are of great monastic rigor, their chief occupation day and night being solemn public prayer. The others enjoy a little more freedom and practice minor industries in aid of the common support.

RUDE IDOLS OF NEW GUINEA

The tribes of New Guinea, before going hunting or fishing, consult their idols, two specimens of which are here pictured. The natives assert that the idols answer them by tapping with their feet, whether the expedition is to be successful or not being indicated by the number of taps.

ATE ONLY SUGAR TEN DAYS

After being in the hold of the steamship Kentuckian of the Hawaiian-American line for ten days, without anything to eat or drink except the sugar the vessel carried and the moisture he could wipe from the inside of the hull, a Chinaman was found unconscious on arrival at Philadelphia.

ENRAGED COW KILLS A MULE

A mule and a cow pasturing on the farm of F. H. Bay, a few miles north of Wellston, O., became enraged at each other, and fought until the cow settled the contest by a well-directed blow with its horns, killing its opponent.

NEVER TIRES
Of the Food That Restored Her to Health.

"Something was making me ill and I didn't know the cause," writes a Colo. young lady: "For two years I was thin and sickly, suffering from indigestion and inflammatory rheumatism.

"I had tried different kinds of diet, and many of the remedies recommended, but got no better.

"Finally, Mother suggested that I try Grape-Nuts, and I began at once, eating it with a little cream or milk. A change for the better began at once.

"To-day I am well and am gaining weight and strength all the time. I've gained 10 lbs. in the last five weeks and do not suffer any more from indigestion, and the rheumatism is all gone.

"I know it is to Grape-Nuts alone that I owe my restored health. I still eat the food twice a day and never tire of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The flavour of Grape-Nuts is peculiar to itself. It is neutral, not too sweet and has an agreeable, healthful quality that never grows tiresome.

One of the sources of rheumatism is from overloading the system with acid material, the result of imperfect digestion and assimilation.

As soon as improper food is abandoned and Grape-Nuts is taken regularly, digestion is made strong, the organs do their work of building up good red blood cells and of carrying away the excess of disease-making material from the system.

The result is a certain and steady return to normal health and mental activity. "There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Good Roads Bill

A bill recently passed by congress appropriates $500,000 for experimental road construction. The money is to be spent by the secretary of Agriculture in consulation with the Postmaster General. These cabinet officers are to investigate the "saving to the government in the operation of the rural delivery service and to the local inhabitants in the transportation of their products by reason of such improvement, and report the results in detail to congress.

These two cabinet officers are expected to make "such recommendations as shall seem wise for providing a general plan of national aid for the improvement of postal roads in co-operation with the states and counties."

The same bill provides for investigation of this subject by a joint committee composed of five senators and five representatives.—J. O. Rankin Editor, University Farm, St. Paul.

Law Overlooked

After special elections in Wilkin and Pennington counties to decide ties in the contests for county commissioners at the general election, it was discovered at the capitol today that the law provides that in contests for that office ties must be settled by lot at the county auditor's office. The special elections were ordered by Governor A. O. Eberhart. The law provides for special elections in case of a tie for certain offices and the provisions relating to county commissioners had been overlooked. Protests against the legality of the special elections are expected from both counties but until the matter is officially laid before him, Attornay General Lyndon A. Smith declined today to discuss the effect of the second election.—Minneapolis Journal, Dec. 5.

High Cost of Selling

One great cause of the high cost of living lies somewhere in the vast disparity between what the producer of food gets for his products and what the consumer pays for them.

The producer is getting too little and the consumer is paying too much. Both could profit by a reorganization of selling and handling methods, and the problem of this reorganization is something well worth plenty of time and deep thought.

Says the Kansas City Star: "A farmer was loading watermelons on a car at Rock Island station in Oklahoma. They were to be shipped to St. Paul. A man who happened to see him had recently been in St. Paul and knew that melons were retailing there at from sixty to seventy-five cents apiece. The farmer told him that he was getting only five cents apiece, and that it took him all day with two teams to haul the melons to the railroad. With the melon buyer, who came along just then to check up the load, they made a computation.

They found some interesting results, For the car of ten hundred and fifty melons the farmer got $52.50. They would sell in St. Paul for at least $630. Here was a difference of $577.50 between the consumer's price and the producer's price.

Of this $577.50 the buyer took $240. The railrood got $75. Other expenses and profits, including the profit of the jobber and the retailer, took the rest—$262.50.

Out of what the consumer paid, the farmer got 8.33 per cent, the buyer 38.09 per cent; the railroad 11.91 per cent, add other expenses and progts 41.67 per cent.

These figures illustrate a problem deserving the best thought of the country. Cooperation by the producers will do a good deal. Very likely cooperation by the consumers would do more, if it could be brought about.

Every move toward shortening, cheapening, and simplifying the process of getting food from the producer to the consumer is a move toward reducing the high cost of living, a move toward better conditions for both producer and consumer, a move toward lessening poverty and increasing the comfort and well-being of the masses of the people.—Duluth Herald.

Man Owns Wife's Dresses.

The question of who owns the dresses of a wife came up in the Brompton county court of Maryland recently and the judge decided that the husband is the owner. The man held that he had given the wife the money to buy the dresses in dispute and although they were not paid for it was decided that they belonged to him.

CAUSED LISTENERS TO SMILE.

Clergyman's Announcement Tickled the Risibilities.

As may be inferred, each profession has its stock jokes—its stories innumerable—each of which having a flavor of its own. That the point of a joke or jest lies not in the tongue of him who makes it, but in the ear that hears, is the testimony of the great dramatist.

The doctor on his rounds and the judge upon the bench have both an audience ready and willing to accept as the highest wit the bon mots of the speakers; and there is no club or gathering of men that does not acclaim one of its members as supreme in this respect, and are ready to yield due recognition of the gift.

It must be admitted that the blunders and jests clerical stand for some reason pre-eminent both in number and in mirth producing qualities. The reason, of course, is not far to seek—the very surroundings, in which they occur—the very upsetting of one's preconceived notions of reverence, all tend to cause a reaction in the ordinary mental equilibrium, and the simplest mistake or accident under such circumstances assumes the proportions of a huge comedy.

Recently a divine, in drawing the attention of his congregation to a special communion service on the following Sunday informed them that "the Lord is with us in the forenoon and the bishop in the evening."

WORLD'S CITIES HARD TO KILL.

Rome Twice Burned, Six Times Starved—Paris' Eight Sieges.

Few of the world's great cities have not faced, at one time or another, total destruction. But a city is hard to kill.

Take Rome, for instance. She has been swept by pestilence no fewer than ten times. She has been twice burned and six times driven to submission by starvation. Perhaps it is on account of her great vitality that she is called the Eternal city.

Paris has gone through eight sieges, ten famines, two plagues and one fire which devastated it.

Constantinople has been burned out nine times and has suffered from four plagues and five sieges. In addition, she has been ruled by monarchs who were worse than a plague. Yet Constantinople still flourishes.

London has been decimated five times by plagues, in addition to visitations of typhus, cholera and other epidemics. She has been burned more or less severely several times.—Stray Stories.

Preferred the Insomnia.

A story is told of the late bishop of London, Dr. Creighton, and Lord Rosebery. Lord Rosebery complained to the bishop of want of sleep, to which the bishop replied that he never suffered from insomnia. The earl observed that he wished he knew the remedy. The bishop's formula was very simple. If he felt drowsy he started to write a sermon and in a few moments he was wide awake. On the other hand if he wanted to sleep all he had to do was to start to read a sermon. Then sleep came in a few seconds. Lord Rosebery replied that it was his practice to choose the lesser evil, and he preferred want of sleep to reading sermons.

For Your Health.

Conquer your moods; don't let your moods conquer you. People who give way to moods never amount to much, because they are never masters of themselves. They never know in the morning whether they are going to do a good day's work or not, whether they are going to be a cheering or a depressing influence on the people around them. If they feel like being good-tempered, they will be; if they feel like "snapping" at everybody, they will snap.

People who suffer from "moods" should be careful about their habits. They should be regular about meals, sleep, exercise and work. The condition of the health has much to do with moods, and there is nothing that contributes so much to health as absolute regularity.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ninety dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due, and is due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by C. F. Carpenter and Ella A. Carpenter, his wife, and Geo. M. Bleecker and Mary F. Bleecker, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of St. Hilaire, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date the 16th day of June, 1910, and duly acknowledged by said mortgagors on June 27th, 1910, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Red Lake and state of Minnesota on the 30th day of June, 1910, at 5 o'clock p. m., in book 3 of mortgages on page 112.

Which said mortgage was after the organization and creation of Pennington county, Minnesota, duly transcribed into the records in the office of the register of deeds of said Pennington county, and recorded therein on the 23rd day of November, 1910, in book 22 of mortgages on page 332;

And Whereas, The said mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of fifteen hundred ninety and no-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum from the 10th day of June, 1912, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, towit: The south one-half of the southeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section two (2) in township one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-four (44) west of the fifth principal meridian, in Red Lake county, Minnesota, now a part of Pennington county, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington county at the east front door of the court house in the city of Thief River Falls, in Pennington county in said state on the 30th day of December, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of fifteen hundred ninety dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

DAKOTA DEVELOPS

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. 350 D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions in banks and offices this year—had calls for over 500. All Fargo banks and 683 others employ D. B. C. pupils as cashiers, tellers, bookkeepers or stenographers. No other school offers such endorsement.

BUSINESS TRAINS FOR

Our $60 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $85 course in Commerce and Banking (endorsed by Bankers' Association), supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the larger concerns. The shorthand course (under two expert reporters), trains court reporters and high grade stenographers. The stenographers for the U. S. District Court, N. D. Supreme Court, Third Judicial District and the Cass Co. Court are D. B. C. graduates. Do other schools offer this PROOF of superior training?

COLLEGE CASH

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building (350,000 cubic feet of space), is seated with roll top desks, has 100 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. Our pupils deal with each other and with elegantly equipped offices, using aluminum money. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils like them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C."

Resolutions of Condolence

Whereas, The Great and Supreme Ruler of the Universe has in His infinite wisdom removed from among us one of our worthy and esteemed brothers, John J. Soll; and whereas, the long and intimate relation held with him in the faithful discharge of his duties as an Odd fellow and as a citizen of our great state makes it eminently fitting that we record our appreciation of him; therefore

Be It Resolved, That the wisdom and ability which he has exercised in the aid of Oddfellowship by service, contributions, and counsel; and the honest, honorable, and upright life he has led as an American citizen will be held in grateful remembrance;

Be It Resolved, That the sudden removal of such a life and character from among our midst leaves a vacancy and sorrow that will be deeply realized by all good Odd-fellows and all good citizens in Pennington and Red Lake counties, Minnesota, and will prove a serious loss to our beloved order.

Be It Resolved, That with deep sympathy with the bereaved relatives of the deceased we express our hope that so great a loss to us all may be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well;

Be It Further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of St. Hilaire Lodge No. 147, I. O. O. F., St. Hilaire, Minnesota, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow of our beloved brother, and a copy of said resolutions be printed in The St. Hilaire Spectator.

Council Proceedings

Special meeting of the village council of the village of St. Hilaire held Dec. 12, 1912, for the purpose of considering the matter of advertising the $4,000 bond issue for sale.

Meeting called to order by President J. C. Dahl. Members present, Olson, Swanson, Dahl. Members absent, McKercher and Hovet.

The following resolution, offered by Dr. C. Swanson and seconded by H. Olson, was duly passed:

Resolved that the village council of the village of St. Hilaire hold a meeting at the village hall in said village on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1912, at 8 o'clock p. m. of said day for the purpose of opening bids for the purchase of the $4,000 in bonds authorized to be issued by said village at a special meeting of the qualified electors thereof held on November 5, 1912, that all bids therefor shall be sealed bids and shall be filed with the village recorder of said village prior to the hour of the last aforementioned meeting of said village; that said village council reserves the right to reject any or all bids that may be offered; and that notice of said meeting of said council shall be given by the publication thereof for three consecutive weeks in the St. Hilaire Spectator, a weekly newspaper published in said village.

There being no further business meeting adjourned.

Lingering Superstitions.

"Will a lucky gentlewoman give an unlucky one a tiny mascot to bring luck?" runs an advertisement in an English paper. Here was a poor soul—for if there is a creature on the face of the earth whose fate calls for pity it is a gentlewoman who is down—keeping in her poverty some of that superstition or faith, whatever it may be called, which is the only thing that keeps misforune from crushing the sufferer. If only she could get the right charm she might induce fate to look kindly on her! People call this a practical age, but evidences of superstition continue to appear. A lawsuit not long ago revealed the fact that an astrologer kept a motorcar and had a fine house, etc., all of which came out of the proceeds of a zodiacal magazine.

As Exemplified.

Having given his order twenty minutes before and seeing no indications that his dinner was ready, the man with the sparse whiskers beckoned to a waiter.

"My friend," he said, "perhaps I have made a mistake. Is this a pay as you enter restaurant?"

"No, sir," responded the young man in the white apron, yawning. "This is a dinner cooked while you wait restaurant."

Thereupon he resumed his dreamy, contemplative attitude, and the man with the sparse whiskers waited some more.—Chicago Tribune.

A Reply to Gladstone.

"Gladstone had no great scientific knowledge," said an English writer, "and at a dinner, when Faraday described an important new scientific discovery, the premier showed indifference.

"'After all,' he said, hiding a yawn behind his hand, 'what use will it ever be?'

"'Why,' said Faraday, 'there's every probability, sir, that some day you'll be able to tax it.'"

No Piano has ever been more enthusiastically endorsed. The Artistic Case, the Easy, Responsive Action, and above all the deep, sweet, rich Tone, captivates performer and listener. The united verdict is that

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Sharp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

The Carpet from Bagdad

SYNOPSIS.

George Percival Algernon Jones, vice-president of the Metropolitan Oriental Rug company of New York, thirsting for romance, is in Cairo on a business trip. Horace Ryanne arrives at the hotel in Cairo with a carefully guarded bundle. Ryanne sells Jones the famous holy Yhiordes rug which he admits having stolen from a pasha at Bagdad. Jones meets Major Callahan and later is introduced to Fortune Chedsoye by a woman to whom he had loaned 150 pounds at Monte Carlo some months previously, and who turns out to be Fortune's mother. Jones takes Mrs. Chedsoye and Fortune to a polo game. Fortune returns to Jones the money borrowed by her mother. Mrs. Chedsoye appears to be engaged in some mysterious enterprise unknown to the daughter.

CHAPTER VI.—(Continued.)

Some one was sitting down beside him. It was Ryanne, in evening clothes, immaculate, blase, pink-cheeked. There are some men so happily framed that they can don ready-made suits without calling your attention to the fact. George saw at once that the adventurer was one of these fortunate individuals.

"Makes a rather good picture to look at, eh?" began Ryanne, rolling a flake-tobacco cigarette. "Dance?"

"No. Wish I could. You've done quick work," with admiring inspection. "Not a flaw anywhere. How do you do it?"

"Thanks. Thanks to you, I might say. I did some tall hustling, though. Strange, how we love these funeral toggeries. We follow the dance and we follow the dead, with never a variation in color. The man who invented the modern evening clothes must have done good business during the day as chief-mourner."

"Why don't you send for your luggage?"

Ryanne caressed his chin. "My luggage is, I believe, in the hands of the enemy. It is of no great importance. I never carry anything of value, save my skin. I'm not like the villain in the melodrama: no incriminating documents, no lost wills, no directions for digging up pirates' gold."

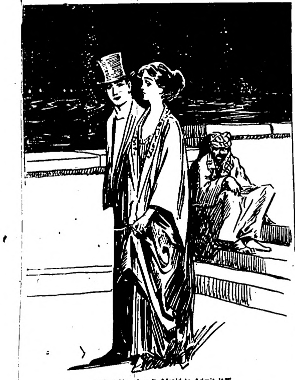
"I suppose you'll soon be off for America?" George asked indifferently.

"I suppose so. By the way, I saw you at the game today."

"No! Where were you?"

"Top row. I am going to ask a favor of you. It may sound rather odd to your ears, but I know those two ladies rather well. I kept out of the way till I could find some clothes. The favor I ask is that you will not tell them anything regarding the circumstances of our meeting. I am known to them as a globe-trotter and a collector."

"That's too bad," said George contritely. "But I have already told them."



"And You Aren't Afraid to Admit It?"

"The devil you have!" Ryanne dropper his cigarette into the ash-tray. "If I remember rightly, you asked me to say nothing."

"I know," said George, visibly embarrassed. "I forgot."

"Well, the fat is in the fire. I dare say that I can get round it. It was risky. Women like to talk. I expect every hour to hear of some one arriving from Bagdad."

"There's no boat from that direction till next week," informed George, who was a stickler on time-tables.

"There are other ways of getting into Egypt. Know anything about racing-camels?"

"You don't believe . . . ?"

"My friend, I believe in all things that haven't been proved impossible. You've been knocking about here long enough to know something of the tenacity of the Arab and the East Indian. Given a just cause, an idol's eye or a holy carpet, and they'll follow you round the world ten times, if need be. I never worry needlessly, but I lay out before me all the points of the game. There is one man in Bagdad who will never cease to think of me. This fellow is an Arab, Mahomed-El-Gebel by name, the real article, proud and savage, into whose keeping the Holy Yhiordes was given; Mahomed-El-Gebel, the Pasha's right-hand, a sheik in his own right."

"But you haven't got the rug now."

"No, Mr. Jones, I haven't; but on the other hand, you have. So, here we are together. When he gets through with me, your turn."

George laughed. Ryanne grew thoughtful over this sign. Percival Algernon did not seem exactly worried.

"Aren't you a little afraid?"

"I? Why should I be?" inquired George innocently. "Certainly, whatever your Arab friend's arguments may be, moral or physical, I'm going to keep that Yhiordes."

Was he bluffing? Ryanne wondered. Did he really have nerve? Well, within forty-eight hours there would come a test.

"Say, do you know, I rather wish you'd been with me on that trip—that is, if you like a rough game." Ryanne said this in all sincerity.

"I have never been in a rough game, as you call it; but I've often had a strong desire to be, just to find out for myself what sort of a duffer I am."

Ryanne had met this sort of man before; the fellow who wanted to know what stuff he was made of, and was ready to risk his hide to find out. His experience had taught him to expect nothing of the man who knew just what he was going to do in a crisis.

"Did you ever know, Mr. Jones," said Ryanne, his eyes humorous, "that there is an organization in this world of ours, a company that offers a try-out to men of your kidney?"

"What's that? What do you mean?"

"What I say. There is an established concern which will, upon application for a liberal purchase of stock, arrange any kind of adventure you wish."

"What?" George drew in his legs and sat up. "What sort of a jolly is this?"

"You put your finger upon the one great obstacle. No one will believe that such a concern exists. Yet it is a fact. And why not?"

"Because, it wouldn't be real; it would be going to the moon a la Coney Island."

"Wrong, absolutely wrong. If I told you that I am a stockholder in this company, and that the adventure of the Yhiordes rug was arranged for my special benefit, what would you say?"

"Say?" George turned a serious countenance toward the adventurer. "Why, the whole thing is absurd on the face of it. As a joke, it might go; but as a genuine affair, utterly impossible."

"No," quietly. "I admit that it sounds absurd, yes; but ten years ago they'd have locked up, as insane, a man who said that he could fly. But think of last summer at Paris, at Rheims, at Frankfort; the Continental air was full of flying-machines. Bah! It's pretty difficult to impress the average mind with something new. Why shouldn't we cater to the poetic, the romantic side of man? We've concerns for everything else. The fact is, mediocrity is always standing behind the corner with brickbats for the initiative. Believe me or not, Mr. Jones, but this company exists. The proof is that you have the rug and I have the scars."

"But in these prosaic times!" murmured George, still skeptical.

"Prosaic times!" sniffed Ryanne. "There's one of your brickbats. They swung it at the head of the first printer. Prosaic times! My friend, this is the most romantic and bewildering age humanity has yet seen. There's more romance and adventure going about on wheels and steel-bottoms than ever there was in the days of Drake and the Spanish galleons. There's an adventure lurking round the nearest corner—romance, too. What this organization does is to direct you; after that you have to shift for yourself. But, like a first-rate physical instructor, they never map out more than a man can do. They gave me the rug. Your bones, on such a quest, would have been bleaching upon the banks of the Tigris."

"What the deuce is this company called?" George was enjoying the conversation immensely.

"The United Romance and Adventure company, Ltd., of London, Paris, and New York."

"Have you any of the company's paper with you?" George repressed his laughter because Ryanne's face was serious enough.

"Unfortunately, no. But if you will give me your banker's address I'll be pleased to forward you the prospectus."

"Knauth, Nachod and Kuhne. I am shortly leaving for home. Better send it to New York. I say, suppose a chap buys an adventure that is not up to the mark; can he return it or exchange it for another?"

"No. It's all chance, you know. The rules of the game are steel-bound. We find you an adventure; it's up to you to make good."

"But, once more suppose a chap gets a little too rough a game, and doesn't turn up for his dividends; what then?"

"In that event," answered Ryanne sadly, "the stock reverts to the general fund."

George lay back in his chair and let go his laughter. "You are mighty good company, Mr. Ryanne."

"Well, well; we'll say nothing more about it. But a moment gone you spoke as if you were game for an exploit."

"I still am. But if I knew the adventure was prearranged, as you say, and I was up against a wall, there would be the inclination to cable the firm for more instructions."

Ryanne himself laughed this time. "That's a good idea. I don't believe the company ever thought of such a contingency. But I repeat, our business is to give you the kick-off. After that you have to fight for your own downs."

"The stock isn't listed?" again laughing.

"Scarcely. One man tells another, as I tell you, and so on."

"You send me the prospectus. I'm rather curious to have a look at it."

"I certainly shall do so," replied Ryanne, with gravity unassumed. "Ah! Here come Mrs. Chedsoye and her daughter. If you don't mind, I'll make myself scarce. I do not care to see them just now, after your having told them about the stolen Yhiordes."

"I'm sorry," said George, rising eagerly.

"It's all in the game," gallantly.

George saw him gracefully maneuver his way round the crush toward the stairs leading to the bar. Really, he would like to know more about this amiable free-lance. As the old fellows used to say, he little dreamed that destiny, one of those things from Pandora's box, was preparing a deeper and more intimate acquaintance.

"And what has been amusing you, Mr. Jones?" asked Mrs. Chedsoye. "I saw you laughing."

"I was talking with the rug chap. He's a droll fellow. He said that he had met you somewhere, but concluded not to renew the acquaintance, since I told him that his adventure in part was known to you."

"That is foolish. I rather enjoy meeting men of his stamp. Don't you, Fortune?"

"Sometimes," with a dry little smile. "I believe we have met him, mother. There was something familiar about his head. Of course, we saw him only from a distance."

"I do not think there is any real harm in him," said George. "What made me laugh was a singular proposition he set before me. He said he owned stock in a concern called 'The United Romance and Adventure company;' and that for a specified sum of money, one could have any adventure one pleased."

"Did you ever hear of such a thing?" cried the mother merrily. Fortune searched her face keenly. "The United Romance and Adventure Company! He must have been joking. What did you say his name is?"

"Ryanne. Joking is my idea exactly," George agreed. "The scheme is to plunge the stockholder into a real live adventure, and then let him pull himself out the best way he can. Sounds good. He added that this rug business was an instance of the success of the concern. There goes the music. Do you dance, Miss Chedsoye?"

"A little." Fortune was preoccupied. She was wondering what lay behind Mr. Ryanne's amiable jest.

"Go along, both of you," said Mrs. Chedsoye. "I am too old to dance. I prefer watching people." She sat down and arranged herself comfortably. She was always arranging herself comfortably; it was one of the secrets of her perennial youth. She was very lovely, but George had eyes for the daughter only. Mrs. Chedsoye saw this, but was not in the least chagrined.

"It is so many years since I tripped the light fantastic toe," George confessed, reluctantly and nervously, now that he had bravely committed himself. "It is quite possible that the accent will be primarily upon the trip."

"Perhaps, then," replied the girl, who truthfully was out of tune, "perhaps I had better get my wraps and we'll go outside. The night is glorious."

She couldn't have suggested anything more to his liking. And so, after a little hurrying about, the two young people went outside and began to promenade slowly up and down the mole. Their conversation was desultory. George had dropped back into his shell and the girl was not equal to the task of drawing him out. Once he stumbled over a sleeping beggar, and would have fallen had she not caught him by the arm.

"Thanks. I'm clumsy."

"It's rather difficult to see them in the moonlight; their rags match the pavements."

The Egyptian night, that sapphirine darkness which the flexible imagination peoples with lovely and terrible shades, or floods with mystery and romance and wonder, lay softly upon this strip of verdure aslant the desert's face, the Valley of the Nile. The moon, round, brilliant, strangely near, suffused the scarred old visage of the world with phantom silver; the stones of the parapet glowed dully, the pavement glistened whitely, all things it touched with gentleness, lavishing beauty upon beauty, mellowing ugliness or effacing it. The deep blue Nile, beribboned with the glancing lights from the silent feluccas, curling musically along the sides of the frost-like dahabeahs and steamers, rolled on to the sea; and the blue-white arc-lamps, spanning the Great Nile bridge, took the semblance of a pearl necklace. From time to time a caravan trooped across the bridge into Cairo.

"Do you care for poetry, Mr. Jones?"

"I? I used to write it."

"And you aren't afraid to admit it?"

"Well, I shouldn't confess the deed to every one," he answered frankly. "We all write poetry at one time or another; but it's generally not constitutional, and we recover."

"I do not see why any one should be ashamed of writing poetry."

"Ah, but there is poetry and poetry. My kind and Byron's is born of kindred souls; but he was an active genius, whereas, I wasn't even a passive one. In all great poets I find my own rejected thoughts, as Emerson says; and that's enough for my slender needs. Poets are rather uncomfortable chaps to have round. They are capricious, irritable, temperamental, selfish, and usually demand all the attention."

The little vocal stream died up again, and once more they listened to the magic sounds of the night. She stopped abruptly to look over the parapet, and his shoulder met hers; after that the world to him was never going to be the same again.

Moonlight and poetry; not the safest channels to sail uncharted. The girl was lonely, and George was lonely, too. His longing had now assumed a definite form; hers moved from this to that, still indefinitely. The quickness with which this definition had come to George rather startled him. His first sight of Fortune Chedsoye had been but yesterday; yet, here he was, not desperately but consciously in love with her. The situation bore against all precepts; it ripped up his preconceived ideas of romance as a gale at sea shreds a canvas. He felt a bit panicky. He had always planned a courtship of a year or so, meetings, separations, and remeetings, pleasurable expectations, little junkets to theaters and country places; in brief, to witness the rose grow and unfold. Somewhere he had read or heard that courtship was the plummet which sounded the depths of compatibility. He knew nothing of Fortune Chedsoye, save that she was beautiful to his eyes, and that she was as different from the ordinary run of girls as yonder moon was from the stars.

Again she stopped, leaning over the parapet and staring down at the water swirling past the stone embankment. He did likewise, resting upon his folded arms. Suddenly his tongue became alive; and quietly, without hesitancy or embarrassment, he began to tell her of his school life, his life at home. And the manner in which he spoke of his mother warmed her; and she was strangely and wonderingly attracted.

"Of course, the mother meant the best in the world when she gave me Percival Algernon; and because she meant the best, I have rarely tried to hide them. What was good enough for her to give was good enough for me to keep. It is simply that I have been foolish about it, supersensitive. I should have laughed and accepted the thing as a joke; instead, I made the fatal move of trying to run away and hide. But, taking the name in full," lightly, "it sounds as incongruous as playing Traumerei on a steam-piano."

He expected her to laugh, but her heart was too full of the old ache. This young man, kindly, gentle, intelligent, if shy, was a love-child. And she? An offspring, the loneliest of the lonely, the child that wasn't wanted. Many a time she had thought of flinging all to the winds, of running away and hiding where they never should find her, of working with her own hands for her bread and butter. Little they'd have cared. But always the rebel spirit died within her as she stepped outside the villa gates. To leave behind for unknown privations certain assured comforts, things of which she was fond, things to which she was used, she couldn't do it, she just couldn't. Morally and physically she was a little coward.

"Let us go in," she said sharply. Another moment, and she would have been in tears.

CHAPTER VII.

Ryanne Tables His Cards.

During this time Mrs. Chedsoye; the major, Messrs. Ryanne and Wallace, officers and directors in the United Romance and Adventure Company, Ltd., sat in the major's room, round the boudoir-stand which had temporarily been given the dignity of a table. The scene would not have been without interest either to the speculative physiognomist or to the dramatist. To each it would have represented one of those astonishing moments when the soul of a person comes out into the open, as one might express it, incautiously, to be revealed in the expressions of the eyes and the mouth. These four persons were about going forward upon a singularly desperate and unusual enterprise. From now on they were no longer to fence with one another, to shift from this topic to that, with the indirect maneuvers of a house-cat intent upon the quest of the Friday mackerel. The woman's face was alive with eagerness; the oldest man looked from one to the other with earnest calculation; Wallace no longer hid his cupidity; Ryanne's immobility of countenance was in itself a tacit admission to the burning of all his bridges that he might become a part of this conclave.

"Smuggling," said the major, with prudent lowering of voice, evidently continuing some previous debate, "smuggling is a fine art, a keen sporting proposition; and the consequences of discovery are never serious. What's a fine of a thousand dollars against the profits of many successful excursions into the port of New York? Nothing, comparatively. For several years, now, we have carried on this business with the utmost adroitness. Never have we drawn serious attention. We have made two or three blunders, but the suspicions of the secret-service were put to sleep upon each occasion. We have prospered. Here is a gem, let us say, worth on this side a thousand; over there we sell it for enough to give us a clean profit of three or four hundred. Forty per cent. upon our investment. That ought to be enough for any reasonable person. Am I right?"

Mrs. Chedsoye alone was unresponsive to this appeal.

"I continue, then. We are making enough to lay by something for our old age. And that's the only goal which never loses its luster. But this affair!"

"Talk, talk," said Mrs. Chedsoye impatiently.

"My dear Kate, allow me to relieve my mind."

"You have done so till the topic is threadbare. It is rather late in the day to go over the ground again. Time is everything just now."

"Admitted. But this affair, Kate, is big; big with dangers, big with pitfalls; there is a hidden menace in every step of it. Mayhap death; who knows? The older I grow, the more I cling to material comforts, to enterprises of small dangers. However, as you infer, there's no going back now."

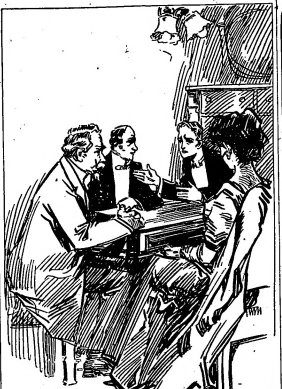
"No," assented Ryanne, his mouth hard; "not if I have to proceed alone."

She smiled at him. "You talk of danger," speaking to the major. "What danger can there be?"

"The unforeseen danger, the danger of which we know nothing, and therefore are unable to prepare for it. You do not see it, my dear, but it is there, nevertheless."

Wallace nodded approvingly. Ryanne shrugged.

"Failure is practically impossible. And I want excitement; I crave it as you men crave your tobacco."



"It's the Excitement of Getting It and Coming Away Unscathed."

"And there we are, Kate. It really isn't the gold; it's the excitement of getting it and coming away unscathed. If I could only get you to look at all sides of the affair! It's the Rubicon."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Salt Put to Varied Uses

Invaluable to Mankind Though as a Condiment It Should Be Employed Sparingly.

If food is tasteless without salt, it is ruined with too much. Unappetizing cooking is often due to guesswork. A level teaspoonful of salt is sufficient for a quart of soup, sauce, or vegetables.

Salt used once a day is an excellent dentrifrice, tending to keep off tartar. It is said to retard receding gums.

A half teaspoonful of salt added to a cup of hot water—which many persons take each morning—will make it palatable.

Do not gargle with salt water. Throat specialists consider it injurious to the tender mucous membrane of the nose.

Salt water rots the hair, so never fail to rinse with fresh water after sea bathing.

To set color in wash materials and embroidery cottons soak them in strong salt water.

An excellent tonic for nervous people is to take salt rubs twice a day. As sea salt dissolves slowly, some of it can be kept in solution in a glass jar to be ready when needed.

When a child is inclined to bow legs or to have a weak back, rub it night and morning with strong salt water.

A faded carpet is freshened if wiped off with a wet cloth wrung from strong salt water. Sprinkle floor with dampened salt and sweep well.

Bad dyspepsia can be helped by dissolving pinches of salt on the tongue after eating, or when there is a sense of oppression.

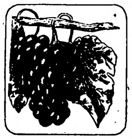
GRAPES FOR USE IN WINTER

Placed in Department of House Cellar Without Any Artificial Heat Some Keep Well.

What a pity it is that grapes will not keep longer. Every autumn I place in a department of my house cellar, where there is no artificial heat, baskets of various varieties of grapes, says a writer in Green's Fruit Grower. I do not expect the Worden, Concord, Delaware and Niagara to keep long, therefore I consume them first. After these I consume the Brighton, which is a fairly good keeper, but which shrivels up considerably. Barry has kept well with me this season. Gaertner, a red grape, has kept perfectly up to Thanksgiving.

Mills, a black grape with very large compact cluster, is the best keeper of all that I have tested, being in perfect condition on Thanksgiving day.

I hear of many methods of keeping grapes through the winter, but I have never succeeded in doing so in my ordinary fruit room. The grapes must not be placed in piles in baskets or boxes. With me they do the best in single layers. If one layer is piled on top of another they are inclined to rot. Some people cut off portions of the vine with clusters on it and place the ends of the vine in a bottle of water and report good results in keeping the grapes plump and fresh. Others insert one end of each stem of grapes in a bottle of water, but when the water evaporates it must have attention, therefore this is rather an expensive method. The Catawba has the reputation of being the best keeper of the hardy nothern grapes. The Catawba and even the Delaware are kept, as I assume in cold storage, and put on the market in western New York all through the winter, but I observe there is difficulty in keeping even the Catawba in prime condition for the holidays.

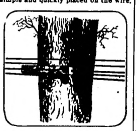


A Good Keeping Variety.

INSULATOR FOR THE TREES

Wood Used Should Be Thoroughly Waterproofed to Prevent Branches From Forming.

Part of the telephone lineman's work consists in keeping the wires clear of trees and their branches, which often afford a good ground. The Morse tree insulator here shown is simple and quickly placed on the wire, says the Popular Electricity. It is a rectangular piece of wood that may be placed on a wire by means of two crosswise grooves deep enough to meet a shallow groove on the face. The wire passes from one crosswise groove along the face groove and out by way of the second groove, the middle of the insulator thus held by the wire bearing against the limb or tree without the use of nails or other fasteners. The wood for the insulator is thoroughly waterproofed.



Tree Insulator.

Quantities of Water.

Consider the kind of plant you are watering. Soft-stemmed kinds, especially those with large leaves, will require much more water than hard-wooded, slow-growing kinds. While the former easily recover from drouth, the hard-wooded suffer permanently from extremes.

The seasons and time of day should also be watched. Plants not in active growth should be watered sparingly until they have regained their foliage. Watering in the evening just before dark greatly aids fungous diseases, as the foliage remains wet through the night.

The orchardist must figure the value of the land per year on which the apples are grown, the cost of pruning, spraying, cultivating, picking and packing, the cost of the barrel and the cost of delivering the barrel in full wagon loads at the nearest railroad station.

Cool the Ashes.

Ashes for fertilizing the grape vine should be cooled before applying them and then they should be so placed that they will not come in contact with the vine itself but rather enter the ground and fertilize the roots.

Spray Apple Orchards.

Apple orchards ought to be sprayed three times a year, and when it comes to taking care of 500 to 1,000 trees it will readily be seen that it is no small undertaking.

PLOWING DEEP FOR ORCHARD

It is of Utmost Importance to Examine Shoots of Young Trees for Harmful Little Borer.

In planting a peach orchard the ground should be plowed deep, followed with a sub-soil plow in the same furrow, the deeper the ground is broken up the better. Before planting, it is of the utmost importance to examine the shoots of the young trees for the borer. Generally nurserymen send out peach trees without taking out the borer. A tree planted with a borer in it is sure to die in a few years, very often in its third year after planting. It puts the beginner in the uncertainty to know what is the cause of the death of his trees. They often look as if they were suffering with the yellows, while it is the borer killing the tree. Two years ago we had three trees that to all appearance had the true yellows. When taking out the trees we found two and three borers in the crotch of the roots where it was impossible to see any signs of a borer.

The trees should be examined every spring and fall, and the borer taken out with the knife.

A peach orchard should be started low. The young trees should be cut back when planted from 15 to 24 inches with not a side branch on them. They will put out side branches and make a low, bushy tree for five or six years. After that, they become large and high, bearing fruit almost from the ground to the top of the tree. For the first three years, the new wood should be cut back from a third to one-half. After that it requires not so much cutting back. Only where a leading branch takes possession of the entire growth such a leader should be cut back on a level with the head of the tree. All the dead wood should be taken out after each crop.

FIGHTING THE BORER PEST

Insect Works Injury by Cutting Into Bark and Sap Wood of Tree, Especially Young Ones.

The borer is one of the most serious pests orchardists have to contend with. We have both the round-headed borer in which case the worm or larva is in the wood during parts of three seasons and the flat-headed borer which lives in the trunk of the tree only one season.

The injury done by both is in cutting into the bark and sap wood of the tree, sometimes, especially in the case of young trees, almost entirely girdling them, thus ruining the trees.

Borers in Young Trees.

The methods of fighting both round and flat headed borers are much the same. Two or three methods are available for making the control of borers more easy. In case of older trees, probably the most important method is by mounding, that is heaping up a little mound of earth around the base of the tree. This forces the insect to deposit its eggs higher on the tree so that the worm will be located higher. It is much easier to level this mound of earth down around the tree to find the borer than to have to dig away the soil when it is left level. However, mounding may not be practicable in very stony land. In case of younger trees, the best method is to wrap them with a wood veneer wrapper. And mound a very small amount of earth around these wrappers. This makes it very difficult for the parent of the borer to get its eggs deposited in the trunk of the tree. In sections where the borers are rather numerous, while this practice of wrapping should be followed, it should not be wholly depended upon, but the examining for the borer should also be done. If the wooden wrappers are used it may be necessary to spray inside of them with kerosene emulsion or lime-sulphur for the woolly aphis are apt to accumulate there.

Utility of Mulching.

Strawberry beds in nearly all localities should be mulched in the late fall in order to protect the plants through the winter. In some localities it may not be necessary to mulch, due to sandy soils, a very well-drained soil, or to the fact that the snow forms a continuous blanket during the winter.

Prevent Borers.

In the case of borers as in other insects prevention is always better than a cure. Borers lay two broods a year and the trees should be examined in May and again in the fall, and if any gum is seen at once cut in with a pruning knife and get the larva.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

The quince is an attractive and profitable fruit.

Storing apples in crates makes it easier to detect rot.

Almost any old time is a good time to spread manure in the orchard.

Styles in apples change almost as regularly as do the styles in hats.

It is immaterial whether the peach tree is dehorned this fall or early next spring.

Nursery trees produce the best of scions for propagation either as grafts or buds.

It pays to scatter a loose mulch over the strawberries after the ground is frozen.

Common window screening makes good protection from rabbits for the young trees.

The outdoor pit would make a fine place to store apples if they did not take on that "earthy" flavor.

Corn stalks or other litter about the trunks of apple trees invite the mice, and girdled trees are the result.

Do not purchase trees from unknown parties, no matter how fine their pictures and their promises.

In planting small fruit plants or vines cover each plant with a small forkful of manure just before winter sets in.

The HOME DEPARTMENT

ALL MOST HARMONIOUS

POINT TO BE REMEMBERED ABOUT DRESS ACCESSORIES.

Ornamental Handbags, for One Thing, Called For by the Season's Styles, May Be Easily and Cheaply Made at Home.

The variations of fashion are nowhere more noticeable than in the accessories of dress. Each season shows a great amount of thought given to the small details which combined produce a perfect costume. The entire effect of a handsome imported gown can be lost if the handbag does not harmonize with it.

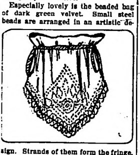
To be strictly modish, one must carry handbags to match each gown. This is an expensive luxury to the woman who has to purchase every article of clothing; but to the clever needlewoman, who is the envy of her less talented sisters, it only means fascinating handwork to be done at odd moments. Many of the most expensive handbags can be duplicated at little expense. Moire, velvet and soft leather, if jeweled, braided or embroidered at home, compare very favorably with those sold in the exclusive shops.

From one of the oldest and best known jewelers on the Rue de la Paix come the attractive models illustrated here.

Old rose velvet is used to fashion the braided bag. The sample design is done with dull gold soutache braid.

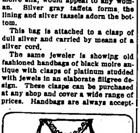
A lining of old gold satin produces a pretty finish to this smart model. If copied in old gold velvet and braided with dull silver, this bag is equally attractive.

Especially lovely is the beaded bag of dark green velvet. Small steel beads are arranged in an artistic design. Strands of them form the fringe. Gray satin is used to line this bag. It is carried with a short but heavy cord of dark green silk. A novelty bag formed of a strip of corbeau-blue moire silk, would appeal to any woman. Silver gray taffeta forms the lining and silver tassels adorn the bottom.



This bag is attached to a clasp of dull silver and carried by means of a silver cord.

The same jeweler is showing old fashioned handbags of black moire antique with clasps of platinum studded with jewels in an elaborate filigree design. These clasps can be purchased at any shop and cover a wide range of prices. Handbags are always acceptable gifts. Any of your friends would appreciate a remembrance of this kind.



Dainty opera and fan bags can be made with little difficulty and furnish delightful work for the woman who enjoys plying her needle.

HAVE SNAKE DESIGNS

Beautiful embroidered evening stockings are now the rage in Paris. The photograph shows Milady's stockings embroidered with a snake. Green and blue beads give the shimmering effect of the twining reptile, while the body is embroidered in olive silk.

TAKE TIME TO REST EYES

Too Close Application to Very Fine Sewing Is Something Always to Be Avoided.

If there is much sewing to do—and at this season of the year there is generally piles of it—the seamstress, dressmaker or mother of a large family, as the case may be, should take care that her eyes are not strained or allowed to become overtired by close application to the stitching of seams, working of buttonholes and the thousand other tasks that are necessary when dressmaking is being done.

For that reason, always be careful, when working on dark materials, to wear a light-colored apron and spread a white cloth on the work table. If you are working by an artificial light, a white cloth on the table will be found to increase the light to an appreciable extent; thus the strain on the eyes will not be so great.

On the other hand, if you are working on white or very light-colored materials, a dark cloth thrown over the lap will reduce the strain on the eyes.

If needles having elongated eyes are used, they will be easier to thread than those with round eyes. When the eyes become very tired, you will find relief in looking out of the window at a distant view, or at a picture at a distant view, or ashrdhrdlhriuu of a landscape that has distance in it—down a long road shaded with overhanging trees or over the hills to distant mountains.

Leaning the head back against the chair and covering the eyes with a cold compress will often relieve eyestrain and eye headache, which is the result of sewing on fine materials or intricate stitchery in fine lace making where the crochet hook is used.

Take care of your eyes; they are your best friends, for what would you do if you should lose your sight?"

FURS ELABORATE AND RICH

Season's Styles Call for an Expenditure That Is a Strain on the Pocket Book.

Never within recollection have we faced more cheerfully the prospect of warmer clothes, for furs are so attractive this season that we welcome cold weather. Ermine cloaks trimmed with narrow lines of skunk or bear prove quite singularly seductive, while among the less hardy type of wrap much significant emphasis is laid on a mingling of broche velvet, mousseline de soie and fur.

Several very sensational efforts, too, have been launched in fur fitments, but so far the Parisienne does not seem to favor the merely fur trimmed muff, brobdingnagian affairs in costly skins appealing to them as more luxuriously impressive. Among the novelties is a deep cape of pelerine of fur, with one long stole end to be flung over the shoulder at will.

A notably strong feeling also obtains for flat, square or round collars of fur as a permanent equipment to habillee costume coats, while anything resembling a Directoire cut exacts the up and down collar, opening in front, an adjunct that works out with particular success in such pelts as ermine, sable and broadtail.

VOGUE OF THE SHIRTWAIST

Original and Becoming Designs Mark the Work, Which Shows Excellence of Designers.

The shirt which is worn with the tailor-made of today is very smart, very original and very becoming, and lovely designs have been evolved, even in the face of the fact that the two-piece suit, consisting of a gown with coat to match, is still immensely popular.

Among the materials which are utilized for these shirts fashion does not discard the homeliest ingredients.

For instance, there is Berlin wool, which is masquerading is a manner which is entirely different to the role it used to play in the days when our grandmothers spent hour after hour at their embroidery frames evolving gaily hued parrots and cabbage roses, for the decoration of walnut wood chairs and sofas.

The ground work of a shirt treated in this fashion is of tulle—fine, clear and soft—and this is covered with an irregular and slightly conventional work design made of darned work for which the white Berlin wool in question is used. The darning is, however, very close and very neat, the outlines being sharp and clear cut. A very striking contrast is afforded by a tiny turned-down collar of black charmeuse, a similar bit of the material forming the cuff, while there is besides a small vest of mousseline de sole set in narrow plaits, and the front is punctuated by a serried row of cut jet buttons.

Another and even more beautiful shirt was carried out in white chiffon, with a motif all over it worked in rich bright gold thread.

Rustic Jardinieres.

Artistic in appearance and a pleasing relief from china and pottery are rustic jardinieres. They are made of wood, with the bark left on the outside, but nicely polished within. Some are covered with birch bark, and among them is a group of odd shaped ones filled with very natural looking "make believe" autumn foliage, any one of which would make a stunning effect in a dining room or hall.

RASH ON FACE FOR 2 YEARS

Sioux Falls, S. D.—"My trouble of skin disease started merely as a rash on my face and neck, but it grew and kept getting worse until large scabs would form, fester and break. This was just on the one side of my face, but it soon scattered to the other side. I suffered a great deal, especially at night, on account of its itching and burning. I would scratch it and of course that irritated it very much. This rash was on my face for about two years, sometimes breaking out lots worse and forming larger sores. It kept me from sleeping day or night for a couple of months. My face looked disgraceful and I was almost ashamed to be seen by my friends.

"A friend asked me to try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I would bathe my face with hot water and a lot of Cuticura Soap, then I would put on the Cuticura Ointment. In less than two days' time, the soreness and inflammation had almost entirely disappeared, and in four weeks' time you could not see any of the rash. Now my face is without a spot of any kind. I also use them for my scalp and hair. They cured me completely." (Signed) Miss Pansy Hutchins, Feb. 6, 1912.

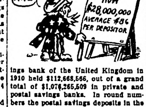
Navy to Test Battleships With Corrugated Hulls

WASHINGTON.—Corrugated battleships will be the subject of tests this winter by Naval Constructor David W. Taylor, on duty in the bureau of construction and repair, in the naval testing tank at the Washington yard. Four vessels for the merchant service have been built in England on this plan. Two outward curves, 23 inches deep, run the length of the ships between the load line and the bilge. Between the convex curves is a concave surface of equal depth. This partial application of the tube principle greatly increases the strength of the hull. So much strength is added that the stringer plates may be dispensed with. This increases the space available for bulk cargo. In addition, however, it is said that the corrugated hull saves fuel and lessens the effect of waves on the steadiness of the ship.

English reports indicate that a corrugated hull will save 16 per cent. in fuel over the cost of driving a smooth hull of equal displacement. Two models, of equal weight and dimensions, each about twenty feet long, will be constructed here, one with a corrugated and the other with a plain hull. Each will be attached to the traveling crane which spans the experimental tank at the Washington navy yard, and the resistance of the models to the water when pulled at a given rate of speed will be accurately registered on the delicate gauges attached to the crane. If the corrugated hull presents less resistance to the water the fact will be instantly indicated on the gauges. No vessel of this type has yet been constructed in this country. The first corrugated vessel was built in England in 1909.

Capt. G. S. Macllwaine of the British navy, recently asked the admiralty to make a test of corrugated ships. He spent a month on the Baltic in a ship in which the ordinary stiff bilge keel is replaced by a keel bearing deep horizontal corrugations. His observations convince him that the corrugated ship is vastly superior to the ordinary type in strength, stability, speed and carrying capacity. Captain Macllwaine claimed that the idea of the corrugated ship was worked out by Arthur H. Haver, a naval architect. The seventh vessel of the kind to come into existence is now being built for Norway. The British officer says that a corrugated vessel is carried about twenty per cent. further with the same amount of coal than a plain ship of similar dimensions. This in a warship means either increase in effective range or increase of armor, armament, etc.

Postal Deposit Savings Show Average of $86



FINE
POSTAL SAVINGS NOW $28,000,000 AVERAGE $86 PER DEPOSITOR

POSTMASTER General Frank H. Hitchcock made public the other day the latest available figures showing that the deposits in postal savings depositories have now reached the sum of $28,000,000. The system was inaugurated January 3, 1911, but most of the deposits have been made within the last year.

The deposits represent 290,000 individuals, making an average of $86 per depositor. The system is now operated in 12,772 postoffices, in every one of the forty-eight states, including 644 branch postoffices.

According to the figures compiled by the controller of the currency the total amount of the deposits in the savings banks of the country in 1911 was $4,212,583,598. This amount was deposited in 1,884 banks by 9,794,647 individual depositors, and the average savings bank account for each depositor was $430.09. Comparison of these statistics shows that the average amount held by each savings bank depositor was about five times the average amount held by each postal savings bank depositor.

According to the report of the controller of the currency, the postal savings bank of the United Kingdom in 1910 held $112,668,566, out of a grand total of $1,076,265,509 in private and postal savings banks. In round numbers the postal savings deposits in the United States are about one-half of one per cent. of the combined deposits in postal depositories and savings banks, while in the United Kingdom the postal savings constitute about 1½ per cent. of the combined deposits in private and postal savings banks.

In France, according to the latest available figures, the postal savings in 1909 aggregated $316,456,866, or an average of about $57 for each depositor.

Postmaster General Hitchcok's figures show that 7,357 banks have qualified to receive postal savings funds.

Army Officers on Detached Duty to Be Removed

ARMY OFFICERS MUST RETURN TO THEIR REGIMENTS

IT is now estimated at the war department that more than 60 per cent. of all army officers now on detached service will have to be removed from their present posts at once, owing to legislation by congress during the last session. This means that more than half of the officers now serving as military attaches at American legations and embassies abroad, as instructors in the military academy at West Point, as instructors in the Army Service schools, as instructors of state militia organizations and as instructors in various military academies in foreign military schools will be ordered back to their regiments.

The law, as one officer put it, is "excessively mandatory," inasmuch as it requires that any officer responsible for a failure to obey it to the full shall forfeit his pay and allowances. Consequently every officer who has not served at least two of the last six years in command of troops will have to return to his regiment before December 15. It has also been found by the law officers of the war department that about a third more of the officers on detached service will have to be removed within six months. A large number of officers on detached duty in Washington are caught pretty severely by this order.

It is said that there are officers who have not been with their commands for years, as they have had pull enough to keep them in easy jobs here in Washington, where they can do their stunts and not half try, and fill in the rest of the time doing society acts.

Washington society without its army and navy officers is mighty slow. There has always been feminine influence to keep plenty of the young men on detached duty in Washington. Of course, this order of congress is obligatory.

Spanish Minister Rejoices in Fifty Suits, Etc.

IT was stated in an authetic quarter the other day that the Spanish minister, Senor Don Juan Riano, has 50 suits of clothes and a correspondingly large number of accessories. Spacious and perfectly equipped quarters are required to accommodate this wardrobe, and in selecting the new legation special attention was paid to this feature.

The present legation, in New Hampshire avenue, has commodious dressing rooms and closets for each suite, but such an outfit as Senor Riano's in order to be easily handled and accessible has to have a room to itself, and, if possible, one built for the purpose.

The garments are classified, and that they may be easily found an inventory is fastened on the door. According to the most advanced authorities "wet" and "dry" rooms are necessary for the complete wardrobe. The "wet" room removes the creases and takes the place of sponging; the "dry" room hardens the costume in the lines it has taken.

Whether Senor Riano's new home is provided with all these comforts is not known, but that every means has been adopted to keep the minister the "best dressed man in town," as he was considered in Paris when connected with the Spanish embassay there, is certain.

And it may be mentioned in this connection that as much care is exercised in the selection and proper preservation of the so-called "accessories" as in the actual suits. These "accessories" include many articles of personal adornment little known to the ordinary man, but are considered absolutely necessary in mind of the Spanish Don. Of course, under this head, may be considered first, the very latest in hats, gloves and ties.

Her Reason.

"Did you struggle when he tried to kiss you?"

"No, mamma."

"But why did you not?"

"Why, mamma, you ought to know from his appearance that he isn't very strong."

Remarkable, Indeed.

"How well Mr. and Mrs. Grasswid seem to get along together."

"Yes, it is quite remarkable, the more so because she wears a necklace that was presented to her by her first husband and he keeps a picture of his first wife in his watch case."

Improved Incandescent Lamp.

Incandescent lamps in which the filaments are in the form of an inverted cone have been found to give one-fifth more light than those of the same size in which filaments form cylinders.

Telephones in Theaters.

On the back of each seat of a new London theater there will be coin in the slot telephones to enable persons with defective hearing to listen to what is being said on the stage.

MICHIGAN FOOTBALL PLAYERS GIVEN "M'S."

Captain George C. Thompson

Seventeen members of the Michigan football squad have been awarded "M's" by the university athletic committee. All but five of the members are residents of Michigan. The list follows: Captain George C. Thompson, Cadillac, Mich.; Clement Quinn and O. C. Carpell, Saginaw, Mich.; James R. Craig, R. H. Torbet, George C. Paterson and James W. Raynesford, Detroit; Miller H. Pontius, Circleville, Ohio; H. H. Huebel and W. H. Collette, Menominee, Mich.; Ernest Almendinger, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Michael Boyle, Duluth, Minn.; Charles Barton, Louisville, Ky.; Thomas Bushnell, Cleveland, Ohio; E. E. Hughitt, Escanaba, Mich.; James C. Musser, Akron, Ohio, and William Cole, Cedar Springs, Mich.

ATTELL'S START AS FIGHTER

Began Career as "Tough Kid" in Streets of San Francisco—Made $200,000 as Pugilist.

Abe Attell is "down and out" in the parlance of the prize ring, according to those experts who witnessed his last two decisive defeats. Judging from his performances in these encounters, he can't "come back," in the opinion of those same experts. It is said he is inclined to feel a little that way himself.

But Abe is a philosopher, if nothing else. He reviewed his fourteen years of fighting the other day. Until he was vanquished by Kilbane Abe was featherweight champion of the world. He has fought over 250 times.

He has fought more champions than any other man now in the ring, and has defended his title every time a 122-pound man could get the offer of a purse and suggested his complicity.

Abe Attell.

He has fought perhaps 3,000 rounds in all.

He does not use tobacco in any form, nor has he ever tipped the goblet. He is twenty-eight years old.

"It's been a pretty good game," he said, reflectively. "Of course I'm kind of sore when I think of all the money I've let get away from me.

"Four of us began together in San Francisco," he continued. "There were Jimmy Britt and Eddie Hanlon and Frankie Neil and myself. We were all kids together, fighting preliminaries about the same time. The others are all done for now. I'm the only one that's left in the ring."

A little later he recollected that his ring career had netted him something more than $200,000. He began as a "tough kid" in the San Francisco streets. He is a bit proud of that early record, too.

"So," said Attell, "by and by a kid would come to my mother's store—or mebbe he'd meet me in the street and call me a 'Jew,' or we'd catch him in the alley, and then I'd murder him."

The process of "murdering" kids was helpful to his shoulder muscles, but began to disturb the neighbors.

"So my mother had me sent away to a reform school," said Abe, "and I stayed there for fifteen months. When I got back I remember all the kids around on the street yelling 'Abie's home.' I said I'd be good. But one of the kids I used to murder—his name was Wires—had been fighting preliminaries, and he had won twenty-nine straight fights. All the kids told me to go in and clean him. Alex. Greggains used to pay $15 for preliminary fights then.

"By and by some of the kids went to Greggains and told him they had a kid who could lick any of his prelim fighters. One of 'em said he was my manager, and Greggains made a match right away with Eddie Lenny.

"I won that fight without a scratch and I gave the $15 to my ma. Every time I won—and I won thirty-four fights straight with a knockout—I gave her my dough."

Billiardist Believes in Himself.

Melbourne Inman, the present champion English style billiard player, is expected back in London soon from his visit to Australia. He is reported willing to give any English player 1,000 points in a match of 18,000 for a bet of $500 up to $1,250 a side.

Walsh's Big Feat.

Ed Walsh, the big reel, who is said to be the greatest twirler of today, pitched 403 1-3 innings this season. He allowed 347 hits, which is less than one per inning.

FIGHTERS NOW LACK PUNCH

Few of Modern Pugilists Possess Sufficient Force in Their Blows to Produce Knockout.

Few fighters of the present day are gifted with the "punch," say experts of the game. The boxers either spar for time and drag along for draw decisions or the sporting world must be forced to the conclusion that there is a dearth of battlers of old of the type of Nelson in his prime, Fitzsimmons, McGovern and Ketchell. This trio, especially Fitz and Ketchell, had wallops like kicks from a mule.

Billy Papke of Kewanee, a contemporary of Ketchell, is still living, to be sure, and only recently defeated Carpenter, champion middleweight of France, but Papke at his best is only a shadow of the husky lad who gave Ketchell the battles of his life.

Johnny Kilbane has yet to demonstrate that he possesses the punch, and Wolgast is dabbling around in limit contests without handling his opponents the K. O. potions.

Fighters must have the wallop to make the greatest successes and shine as drawing cards like Battling Nelson, Joe Gans, Stanley Ketchell, Fitzsimmons and Jeffries.

In the heavyweight division there is not one fighter of class who deserves to eat the crumbs from the table of the old timers so far as real fighting ability is concerned. Old speckled Bob Fitzsimmons might clean out the whole bunch in a single night were he in his prime.

There is no pugilist who is to the fight game what Frank Gotch is to wrestling. Had Gotch been a prize fighter, instead of a grappler, he might have remained the champion of the world for many years. He has speed, endurance, weight, strength and a wonderful brain. He would have raised the level of pugilism just as he has elevated wrestling.

Notes of Sportdom

Wolgast rather than saw off a leg, will tackle the welter weights.

Joe Wood of the Red Sox is bugs on aeroplanes and talks of buying one.

It was announced some time ago that Chick Evans would retire from golf for business.

Rube Marquard's advertising may boost him in vaudeville, but not in advanced baseball.

It looks as if Oscar Vitt will take care of the third base corner for the Tigers next season.

Ralph Works, the further Detroit pitcher, will draw salary from Garry Herrmann next season.

Joe Jackson, says a report, is the first holdout, but Felix Chouinard may assert he had a scoop on that.

Hal Chase, the great first baseman, may never play baseball again. He has started to play basket ball.

Packey McFarland said he might retire, but goes right on training for fear something might turn up.

Jack Powell and Jimmy Stephens of the Browns are going to get the can next spring, according to reports.

Spanking may prove effective as a punishment for nonthinking football plays, but it wouldn't do in baseball. It has been tried and failed.

Sterrett, the Princeton man who finished the season with the New York Americans, says if Tol Pendleton should turn "pro" he will join the Yankees.

Harry Wolverton will get a big salary for a minor league manager as leader of the Sacramento club in the Pacific Coast league, according to reports.

Looks as if Eddie Plank was going after the record held by Cy Young—that of being the grand old man of the pitching world. Eddie broke into the game eleven years ago and has been a winner ever since.

PLANS FOR OLYMPIC GAMES

Congress of International Committee Called for Meeting at Lausanne —Standardize Events.

A special congress of the international Olympic committee has been called for the first week of next May and the location announced is Lausanne, Switzerland. The conclave will have for its main object the reconstruction of the present Olympic program and it is understood that the events selected will become standard for all future games. This congress is being organized by a special committee composed of the leading professional men of Lausanne and the Swiss confederation has signified its intention of giving a helping hand to entertain the visitors.

Not alone will the program of the games be discussed at length, but there will be a number of interesting papers read on the psychology and physiology of the sport in all its aspects. The nations wishing to offer suggestions as to the events will have to do so two months in advance, and these will have to be in the form of a manuscript, which can be in the language of the country offering the suggestion. Should a man in making the suggestion not wish to use his own language, he will have the option of using English. No paper must exceed 3,000 words. Arthur I. Ireland of 45 Avenue D'Ouchy, Lausanne, will have charge of all communications and he will furnish information about the congress, the papers to be submitted, and the general routine of business.

It is proposed to drop some of the events seen in the games at Stockholm and the general rules of competition are to be overhauled. The Greeks, who expected to hold their games in 1914 at Athens, are out to include putting the stone, unlimited run and follow, and the Greek style of throwing the discus. There is a unanimous feeling that the ambidextrous contests with the javelin, discus and 16-pound shot, inaugurated by the Swedes, should be relegated.

The English delegates will submit a new code to govern the starting of all races, the vital point being that there will be a penalty for a break. They will request the revival of the 400-meter hurdle race, and for the hammer to be the old style inplement—that is, a wooden handle and iron head.

BROCKETT IS A HARD HITTER

Buffalo Twirler Finished Season With Batting Average of .317—Played in Seventeen Games.

Contrary to the general run of things, Pitcher Brockett of Buffalo is a hard hitter. In the seventeen games he played with Buffalo last season he secured a batting average of .317 in thirty-eight times at bat. Three of his hits were for two bases and one for three. Brockett also did well as a pitcher, getting an average of .500.

Pitcher Brockett.

Comiskey Cried.

Owner Comiskey, of the White Sox, says the bitterest moment of his life was back in the middle of the '70s, when he was attending school at St. Mary's, Kan. "I picked up the papers and noticed the old Chicago White Stockings had been beaten three straight in a series with St. Louis," says Commy. "I had venerated and loved every man of that team, and I remember I couldn't sleep that night. I actually cried in my bitterness of spirit. I've had many a hard fight since then, but never have I felt so badly as when those grand White Stockings lost. It was like an idol being crushed."

Kraenzlein Gets New Job.

Announcement was made the other day that Dr. Alvin C. Kraenzlein of Milwaukee, who is now abroad, has closed a contract with German athletic organizations to take charge of the German athletes who will enter the 1916 Olympic games. The kaiser believes that with American methods German athletes can wrest athletic supremacy from the United States, and has backed the securing of Kraenzlein for the post.

Kraenzlein to Go Abroad.

Alvin Kraenzlein, former coach of the University of Michigan track team, who is one of the greatest all-round athletes ever developed in America, will spend two years abroad. It is possible he may sign to coach some of the European athletes in preparation for the 1916 Olympic games in Berlin.

Changes in Baltimore.

Manager Jack Dunn of the Baltimore International league team has asked waivers on several of his players. He has notified the other clubs in the league that waivers have been asked on Pitchers Lefty Smith, Barney Pelty and Shortstop Roxey Roach

IN THE LIMELIGHT

STARTS PLAN FOR MODEL DANCE HALLS

"The supervised dance hall is a paying proposition."

This is the verdict of Mrs. Charles H. Israels, who is known by reputation to every dancing hall proprietor in New York. As chairman of the committee of amusement resources for working girls, Mrs. Israels has made a detailed study of the dance hall problem for the last four years. With a committee of seventeen, she has investigated dance halls of every type and in every district; she has secured legislation resulting in the dance hall license act of 1910, and as an evidence of her belief that the supervised dance can be made to pay she has started plans for a series of model dance halls in all the larger eastern cities.

Mrs. Israels and her committee are at present making vigorous efforts to drive the "turkey trot" and its popular companions from the field and substitute a less objectionable style of dancing, but the popularity of those figures makes the task difficult.

"If the public could be made to realize," said Mrs. Israels, "that a large share of the amusement available for young girls of the poorer classes in New York city, a great army of them, is in the hands of organized gangs, the importance of the problem would be brought home to them. I am not just now emphasizing the organized white slave traffic in its relation to the dance hall; that evil is well known and obvious. But considered apart from that situation, as much so as it can be, the plan which the organized gang occupies in this system of dance halls is a pretty large and serious one.

"I have been working, especially during the past year, to trace out and put my finger on these gangs. A few gangs run hundreds of public dances."

PERU'S PRESIDENT OF ENGLISH DESCENT

Doubtless with a view to the opening of the Panama Canal no country in western South America is doing a finer stunt of advertising that Peru, with an immense coast line on the Pacific ocean extending from Ecuador on the north to Bolivia and the aggressive state of Chili on the south. The new trade opportunities should be of great interest to Pittsburgh.

Peruvian newspapers have just arrived giving an account of the inauguration of Guillermo Eduardo Billinghurst as president of the Peruvian republic, and it is something of a story in view of the near inauguration of another president of the United States. While President Billinghurst is a native Peruvian, having been born at Ario in 1851, he is a scion of one of the oldest real English families, tracing his lineage to Adam de Billinghurst, who was given a manor of that name by William the Conqueror. While native to the country, he is the first Englishman to be elected to a presidency in any of the Latin republics. This has been a matter of comment to some extent, but the story of the inauguration has had no more than a passing mention in papers outside of Peru.

It was a "halcyon and vociferous occasion." President Leguia had resigned his office, and the Anglo-Peruvian, Billinghurst, with another Leguia, Roberto E., as first vice-president, and Miguel Echenique as second vice-president, were elected. That is the Peruvian provision for succession, and two vice-presidents have at times been necessary in that country, used to war alarms, but now growing more peaceful every year. The grandfather of Billinghurst was a distinguished officer in the British army, who in some rather inexplicable way fought for the independence of Argentina. His son, the father of the present president, remained in South America, and that explains the nativity of the president, Billinghurst, the most remarkable name that has been connected with high office in any of what are called the "Latin republics," Latin only as being given a local habitation and a name.

CALLS CHINA A NEW UNITED STATES

"So many of us Chinese republicans, graduates of American colleges, are Americans through and through, that, in the intervals of fighting against the imperialists at Nanking, we actually discussed football like any other American college men."

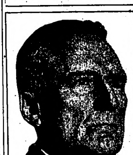
So says Ching-Chun Wang, M. A., Ph. D., Yale '08, veteran of the battles that overthrew the oldest empire in the world, now back in this country as a member of the fifth international congress of chambers of commerce, held in Boston. Also, he is associate director of the Peking-Mukden railway. A man of many titles—titles hard to remember. But there is no difficulty in remembering Dr. Wang's words when he talks about the new China. He is an enthusiast, a sayer of startling things, a describer of conditions that you would not imagine possible in the phlegmatic east, a prophet of the fire of his enthusiasm, still appear so nearly incredible as to make you gasp.

"The new China is a new United States," he declares; and he certainly makes plenty of convincing statements to prove his contention. In the province of railroading alone he shows a China that mighty few people ever dreamed could be evolved—a China playing the role of apostle of progress, complaining bitterly because Japan, a backward nation, is thwarting Chinese plans for the betterment of Manchuria. China progressive!—Japan retrogressive! A huge bite for us of the west to swallow—for us, who have always looked upon China as the perfect type of the "stick-in-the-mud," on Japan as the land whose every step is forward.

We rub our eyes. We ask, "Isn't it a dream?"

Apparently not. To Dr. Wang the new China, the United States of the far east, is anything but a dream.

JOHN SINGLETON MOSBY REPORTED ILL



News from Washington of the serious illness of Col. John S. Mosby brings into prominence again one of the few remaining prominent officers of the army of the Confederacy. Colonel Mosby stood in the front rank of Confederate raiders in the Civil War, being particularly harassing in the 1864 campaign of General Sheridan in the Shenandoah valley which ended with his brilliant victory at Cedar Creek. There was a long line of communication to be guarded from Baltimore to Harper's Ferry and then down the valley, and from Washington by way of Manassas and Front Royal. Colonel Mosby devoted himself to breaking these lines and raiding his enemy's forces wherever possible. No one else in the army was so anathematized as was he. That such a rebel against the government could not only have escaped with his life after the surrender, but should actually later have been appointed to office under the government he sought to destroy, will always be one of the marvels of history. For his case was unlike that of Lee and his generals. It was persistently maintained that he was a lawless, barbarous raider, who violated the laws of war and of humanity, and it was generally known that if he had been captured he would speedily have been hanged.

18 CORPORATIONS HOLD 25 BILLIONS

FINANCIAL STRENGTH OF COUNTRY RESTS IN THE HANDS OF 180 MONEY KINGS.

MORGAN PRIME FIGURE.

Takes Stand for a Short Time—Confirms Data Prepared By Members of the Morgan House.

Washington, Dec. 19.—Eighteen trust companies, three of them Chicago institutions, control, through interlocking directorates of 134 concerns, $25,325,000,000 of the capital of the country invested in industrial, transportation and general financial enterprises. These interlocking directorates consist of 180 men.

Charts Introduced.

Such is the report of 30 statistical experts, which, backed with a vast array of maps and charts, was made public at yesterday's session of the house committe investigating the so-called "money trust." The invetigation suddenly reached its larger phase—that dealing with "concentration and credits"—and the biggest frog in the financial pool, J. Pierpont Morgan, was there waiting for his own turn as a witness while the charts were being explained and the figures reeled off by Lawrence Scudder, the committee's accountant.

Mr. Morgan sat for nearly an hour listening to the mass of statistics which Mr. Untermyer and the committee was piling up concerning the colossal financial operations of leading New York, Chicago and Boston institutions through so-called interlocking directorates. Mr. Morgan heard his own name and that of his firm referred to many times as tables were presented showing the affiliations of that concern with many other banks, trust companies, transportation and industrial corporations.

Morgan Unmoved.

He appeared to be unmoved throughout it all, sitting surrounded by a number of his business associates, relatives and legal representatives, including J. P. Morgan, Jr., his son, and Mrs. Herbert Satterlee, his daughter.

The examination of Mr. Morgan was just reaching a point where it might have become interesting, and perhaps sensational when the adjourament was taken.

Rapid Series of Questions.

Mr. Untermyer conducted the examination of Mr. Morgan, asking a rapid series of questions to bring out the general standing of the firm of J. P. Morgan and company, its branch connections in this country and abroad and its affiliation with many other financial institutions.

The preliminary examination has brought out no clashes, Mr. Morgan responding promptly to the various queries or calling for data.

He confirmed data prepared by members of the Morgan house, showing that 64 accounts with the Morgan firm in January last had depoits of $68,113,000 and that 78 accounts on Nov. 1 had deposits of $81,968,000.

The total capital, surplus and funded debt of these depositors, Mr. Untermyer stated, was $9,765,000,000.

J. P. Morgan appeared in the elaborate tables and charts presented earlier in the day as the dominating figure among the group of New York, Chicago and Boston financiers, who, as it is designed to show, constitute the power that controls a great part of the wealth of the country.

Three Chicago banks, listed with the New York and Boston institutions, are the First National, the Continental and Commercial National and the Illinois Trust & Savings. Their affiliations represent $20,726,000,000.

The 18 banks and trust companies named, through firm members and directors numbering 180, hold in the aggregate 385 directorships in 41 banks and trust companies, having total resources of $3,382,000,000, and total deposits of $2,834,000,000; 50 directorships in 11 insurance companies, having total assets of $2,646,000; 155 directorships in 31 railroad systems, having a total capitalization of $12,193,000,000, and a total mileage of 163,200; six directorships in two express companies and four directorships in one steamship company, with a combined capital of $245,000,000 and gross income of $97,000,000; 98 directorships in 28 producing and trading corporations, having a total of $3,583,000,000 and a total gross annual earning in excess of $1,145,000,000, and 48 directorships in 19 public utility corporations, having a total capitalization of $2,826,000,000 and total gross annual earnings in excess of $428,000,000; in all, 746 directorships in 134 corporations, having total resources or capitalization of $25,325,000,000.

Job Under Dead Man's Name.

Chicago, Dec. 19.—John Gallagher died last April, but not until Wednesday did city officials discover that another man had been holding a municipal position under Gallagher's name. Then "Gallagher" was discharged. He explained that he was at Gallagher's house last April when notice came that the dead man was eligible, by virtue of having passed a civil service examination, to a city position. Seeing no harm in taking a dead man's job, he assumed the name of Gallagher. He had worked every day since.

BUT 3 SUFFRAGETTES LEFT

REACH PEEKSKILL AFTER WALKING 12 MILES IN RAIN.

Reinforcements Promised for Today—27 Have Fallen by the Wayside.

Peekskill, N. Y., Dec. 19.—"Pilgrims three." That is all that was left of the suffragette army of 34 that started on Monday from New York to carry a message to Albany to give Governor Sulzer on his inauguration day.

The trio, Miss Rosalie G. Jones, commander; Mrs. Ida Craft and Miss Levana Dock, trooped into this city shortly before 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Three of the six marchers who "bivouacked" Tuesday night in Ossining deserted yesterday morning, but protested the drizzling rain, which soaked the dust of the Albany post road into soft rich mud, had nothing to do with their decision to abandon the march.

Telegrams and letters promising reinforcements from New York brought courage to the hearts of the remaining trio, when hungry, wet, mud-bespattered and footsore, they reached headquarters here after trudging 12 miles in four hours. At least there will be one more marcher in the ranks today, for Mrs. Jessie Hardy Stubbs, who took temporary leave of her comrades, rejoined them.

Wednesday's was a forced march because it was found that there was no food to be obtained on the way, and for the first time the "army" tramped to its destination without stopping to rest. The journey was an almost continual ovation. Automobiles tooted their horns and passersby of both sexes shouted words of encouragement. At least a score of male wayfarers, importuned for their opinion on woman's suffrage, promised their votes in favor of the cause. Two miles out of Peekskill the marchers were met and escorted into the city by local suffragettes and a lone policeman.

Today's hike will be 16 miles to Fishkill, the longest march of the journey thus far.

Power and Rail Corporations Merged.

Dover, Del., Dec. 19.—The California Railway and Power company, with a capital of $60,000,000, was chartered here by a charter agency. The purpose of the company, as indicated by the article of the incorporation, is to take over the United Railroads of San Francisco, Sierra and San Francisco Power company, the Coast Valleys Gas and Electric company and the San Francisco Electric railways. The concern will maintain offices in New York and San Francisco.

TO TEST NEW CURE FOR TUBERCULOSIS

MINISTERS OF SWEDEN AND URUGUAY TO INVESTIGATE FRIEDMANN'S DISCOVERY.

A LIVING BACILLI IS USED

Minister Takes Patient to Berlin For a Practical Test of What Purports to Be a Marvel.

Berlin, Dec. 19.—Following the public clinic conducted by Dr. Friedmann, discoverer of a reputed cure and preventive for tuberculosis, the governments of Sweden and Uruguay officially recognized the Friedmann method to the extent of conducting investigations.

Is Being Tested.

Minister Masson of Uruguay stated that he was investigating the Friedmann living bacilli for tuberculosis at the instance of his government. The daughter of the president of Uruguay is a consumptive and it is said here that she will be treated by Dr. Friedmann, should the report of Minister Masson be favorable.

Count Tauble, the Swedish minister, said that he was prepared to give the Friedmann treatment a practical test and for that purpose has caused a tubercular patient to be brought from Stockholm.

Other Prominent Arrivals.

A prominent specialist from Santiago, Chile, and a well known Russian physician from St. Petersburg are among arrivals who came to investigate the Friedmann discovery.

NOMINATION FIGHT ON.

Democrats Prevent Session for Confirmation of Taft Appointments.

Washington, Dec. 19. — The long threatened fight in the senate over the confirmation of President Taft's nominations for office has broken, and in the first skirmish the Democrats were successful in preventing an executive session demanded by Senator Cullom (Republican). The results of the encounter are uncertain but the Republicans threaten to continue efforts to secure an executive session for action on the scores of appointments now pending.

A Democratic caucus early in the day at which the Democrats agreed to permit the confirmation only of army and navy appointments, paved the way for the fight on the floor. In the midst of a speech by Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia, Senator Cullom, who refused to accept the ultimatum of the Democrats, made a demand for an executive session.

The Democrats filibustered against the motion, rushing out into the cloakroom on the roll call to break a quorum, and succeeded in delaying action until the court of impeachment convened for the Archbald trial. Republican leaders said they would continue to demand that all appointments be treated in executive session on their merits.

CIGARS AS WEAPONS.

Fights Pack of Wolves with Perfectos.

Duluth, Minn., Dec. 19.—John Bergman of Palmer, Minn., tells of an attack by wolves Tuesday night. With only four cigars as weapons he successfully held a wolf pack at bay until assistance came from the camp where he is employed. He went to Palmer on the afternoon train Tuesday and was walking to the camp in the dusk. He saw wolves cross the road in front of him and then the pack began to close in. Lighting four cigars, he jabbed the lighted ends at the wolves, only stopping long enough to puff the perfectos to keep them glowing. When he finally came within hailing distance of the camp he was exhausted. Men ran out with guns and the wolves fled.

Chinese Women Rescued.

San Francisco, Dec. 19.—Locked in steel cells in a dark evil-smelling Chinese building, United States immigration officials in a spectacular raid found five Chinese women who recently had been smuggled in from the Orient and arrested two men. The entire local staff of the immigration officers battered down steel doors at the entrance of the building. Pitch darkness greeted the officers, access to each floor was gained by a trap door reached by a ladder.

WILSON PICKING HIS CABINET

DECLINES TO NAME MEN HE IS CONSIDERING.

Will Probably Confer With W. J. Bryan Some Time Next Week.

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 19.—After a three hours' conference in New York with William F. McCombs, chairman of the Democratic national committee, President-elect Woodrow Wilson announced as he rode home that he had taken up in earnest the task of picking a cabinet.

No information was forthcoming from either Mr. McCombs or the president-elect as to the names of the men discussed for cabinet portfolios. When Mr. McCombs left the governor he declared that both the cabinet and legislative policies had been talked over. He was asked if Mr. Bryan's name had been mentioned in the discussion. Mr. McCombs answered in the affirmative, but declined to commit himself further.

The correspondents, in questioning the governor on the train later, informed him that Mr. McCombs had said Mr. Bryan's name was mentioned in the long conference.

"Oh, well," the president-elect explained, "we talked about the conference we are going to have soon with Mr. Bryan."

Mr. Wilson intimated that no time or date had been fixed for the meeting with Mr. Bryan. It was suggested to him that Mr. Bryan was due in New York Saturday to attend a dinner in honor of Governor-elect Sulzer. Mr. Wilson said he would be unable to attend the banquet. He did not know yet, however, whether he would see Mr. Bryan on Sunday or immediately afterward, while Mr. Bryan was in this vicinity.

The governor was asked by one of the correspondents if Mr. McCombs would be one of the men who would help him in Washington in "helping him to run the government."

"Of course he will," was Mr. Wilson's reply.

He would not say whether Mr. McCombs would act in an official or unofficial capacity.

Explosion Kills Thirty-one.

Dortmund, Germany, Dec. 19. — Thirty-one coal miners are believed to have keen killed by an explosion of black damp in the Achenbach mine. Six bodies have been recovered from the pit and twenty-five miners are missing. The explosion was so violent that it is thought all were killed.

URGES TAX REFORMS.

County Assessor Bill Advocated as Essential—Uniform Rate Also Urged.

St. Paul.—For the third time the state tax commission will renew its requests to the legislature to provide for county assessors, to make definite the statute relating to property exempt from taxation and to fix a basis for the assessment of real estate. Similar requests were made to the legislatures of 1909 and 1911, but with discouraging results, according to the report of the tax commission which has just appeared.

The commission is most urgent in its request for a law creating the office of county assessor, and in its report argues at length in favor of such a measure. The report includes the draft for a bill defining the duties of such officers and also of the county boards of equalization.

On this point the report says:

"Briefly stated, the proposition presented in the bill is to abolish the local assessor, except in cities where they exist by special law or by charter, and to substitute in their place a county assessor in each county, to be appointed by the county board."

While the law provides that property shall be assessed at its "true and full value," the commission suggests that the passage of the bill requiring all taxable property to be assessed at 50 per cent of this value, and gives its reasons therefor at some length. It says:

"The causes which have led to the downfall of the law are rooted deep in human selfishness and official inefficiency and are much easier to find than they are to remedy. First and foremost among them is the disposition on the part of taxpayers generally to shirk just as much of the public burden as they can. The next in importance is the very large number of weak and incompetent assessors. Men of this type soon discover that the surest way to remain long in office is to be "easy" and "accommodating" and above all to keep the assessment of their district down to the lowest possible point. The inevitable outcome, of course, is a low assessment. Another strong factor in lowering the standard of assessment, can be easily traced to the over zealous desire on the part of many boards of equalization to keep the assessment of their constituents just a little below their neighbors. And all of these forces working together have so completely undermined the law that there is little left but the ink with which it is printed."

PLANT NOT BOUGHT.

Duluth Municipal Ownership Plan May Await Inauguration of New Commission.

Duluth.—Municipal ownership of the electric light plant, for which the voters authorized the issuance of bonds, will likely be allowed to rest until the commission takes over the reins of the city government. Since last July the city has taken no steps to acquire the plant. The lost resolution passed by the council provided that three appraisers should be appointed to estimate the value of the tangible property of the Duluth Edison Electric company. The committee has never been appointed and the matter has been allowed to go without attention for several months.

The new commission, it is expected, will take it up as soon as it has been organized and disposes of the preliminary business which will undoubtedly be demanding attention.

The Duluth Edison company submitted a new contract with a material reduction of rates, but the contract has not been closed. The public has been paying for electric light at the same rate that was specified in the expired contract. It has been remarked on several occasions that a large sum could have been saved to the public had the council approved the new contract pending the negotiations.

Masonic Rally at Owatonna.

Owatonna.—A noteworthy event in Masonic circles was the conclave held in Owatonna of the joint commanderies of the Owatonna, Austin, Faribault and Albert Lea Knights Templar. The red cross degree was conferred by the Owatonna lodge, after which a banquet was served by the women of the Universalist church. Grand Prelate Pinkham, of St. Paul, and Grand Commander Snow, of Wadena, assisted in conferring the degrees. The total deposits in the banks of this county, seven in number, aggregate $3,000,000. A new bank has recently been opened at Medford.

Contest Over Judgeship.

Wabasha.—The election contest case over the judgeship in Wabash county came before Judge Snow in district court. Walter A. Munger, present judge, defeated by James E. McCloud, of Wabasha last month by 172 majority, is the complainant. He contends that the names of the two candidates in the non-partisan contest were not rotated on the ballots as required by law, and that as a consequence, he was defeated. McCloud's name appeared first throughout.

PRODUCE SHOWS GAIN.

Increase of 318,825,864 Bushels Due to Better Farming Rather Than Acreage Increase.

Minneapolis.—Farmers of Minnesota took 318,825,864 bushels of grain out of the soil this year and far exceeded last year's production of wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley and flaxseed, and H. J. Maxfield, commissioner of immigration, who has issued an annual summary, said therein that good farming, and bigger yields per acre, and not increased acreages did the business.

From these crops the farmers got value equal to $135,310,095, Mr. Maxfield figured, but this does not represent all the crop valuation of the state. His report is confined to the six principal grain crops.

His report shows that in 1912, Minnesota produced 55,272,285 bushels of wheat, against 43,935,000 in 1911, a gain of 11,337,285 bushels. This year the oats crop was 142,488,793 bushels, against 67,214,000 bushels the preceding year, or a gain of 75,274,793 bushels. The corn yield this year was 99,144,499 bushels, against 74,140,000 in 1911, a gain of 25,004,499 bushels. The barley yield for 1912 was 49,828,281 bushels, as against 28,025,000 the preceding year, or a gain of 21,803,281 bushels. This year's rye crop was 7,958,640 bushels, against 4,488,000 bushels in 1911, or a gain of 3,470,640 bushels. The flax crop for 1912 was 4,163,366 bushels, against 3,200,000 bushels in 1911, a gain of 963,366 bushels.

The figures were gathered by special crop reporters in each county and the acreages were based upon a careful estimate of the percentage of increase or decrease, compared with the census figures for each county in 1909. The average yield per acre is an estimate, by each crop reporter, based upon reports received from different sections of his respective county.

Mayor Vetoes Resolution.

Owatonna.—The break between the mayor and members of the city council was widened when Mayor Nelson vetoed the council's resolution to approve the paving job recently completed in Owatonna. The contractors, Fielding & Sheply, of St. Paul, were to pay a penalty after a certain period had elapsed, and the city has a goodly sum due it. The council voted to waive its right, and to give the contractors the full amount. Mayor Nelson insists that the amount of the penalty must be paid. It requires the vote of five of the seven aldermen to pass the resolution over his veto.

Extension Work Counts.

Bemidji.—Six hundred and thirty-five persons attended the meetings held this week by Miss Margaret Bull of the University of Minnesota, F. B. McLaren of Wrenshall, and A. E. Nelson, instructor in agriculture in Bemidji, while on the first lap of their series. The coming week meetings will be held in Nebish, Puposky, Redby, Red Lake, Clearbrook, Leonard, Wilton, Solway, Becida, La Porte, Guthrie and Walker.

Shakopee Has Grievance.

Shakopee.—The Shakopee Commercial club protests against the action of the Minneapolis city council in refusing the Minneapolis General Electric company the privilege of extending its electric power service through Minneapolis streets in order to reach Shakopee, Chaska and other suburban towns. Resolutions to this effect were adopted by the club. The business men will carry the fight to Minneapolis.

Four Firemen Hurt.

Minneapolis. — Four city firemen were injured by a falling wall and property valued at about $30,000 was damaged in a spectacular fire here which destroyed a three-story frame warehouse at Fifteenth avenue north and between First and second streets, owned by C. K. Fulton and company, dealers in sash and doors.

Saloon Application Rejected.

St. Cloud.—Acting upon the opinion of the attorney general, the village council of Sauk Rapids rejected the application of A. Oerleski for a saloon license. The question of the number allowable under the 1909 law was settled by Attorney General Young, who ruled there could be only seven.

Supreme Court Affirms Judgment.

Minneapolis.—By far the largest amount of damages ever awarded by a Minnesota jury was affirmed by the state supreme court when judgment against the Minneapolis Street Railway Company for $33,615.35 to Bertha Shaw Blakely, and $16,026.15 to her husband, Frank D. Blakely, was upheld.

Two New Schools To Open.

Duluth.—Two new schools in the unorganized school district of St. Louis county will be occupied for the first time during the coming winter, according to N. A. Young, county school superintendent. The buildings are now under construction and will be ready within a few weeks. School No. 34, of the unorganized district which is located nine miles west of Cook on the Eden road, is now nearing completion. The contractors expect to turn over the building about Dec. 20.

Cloquet.—James Dunphy, 65 years old, a homesteader living on the reservation, was instantly killed by a Great Northern train. He was driving home with a neighbor and left the wagon and went ahead of the team to the crossing. It was dark and he did not see the train.

Hastings.—Nels Linge, of Hastings, was smothered to death in a bin of oats. The oats had become damp, and had formed a crust, on top of which Linge, thinking it solid, stepped. He was precipitated into the bottom of the pit, and the loosened grain poured in on top of him. Four hours later his dead body was found.

Duluth.—Jacob Korisec will receive $5,000 from the Oliver Mining company for the loss of an eye as a result of a settlement which has been effected out of court. Korisec was employed by the company in one of its mines in this county and while in the discharge of his duties was the victim of an accident in which he lost one of his eyes.

Albert Lea.—Mrs. Austin Baker, while dressing a chicken at her home here for the family Sunday dinner, found a half karat diamond in the gizzard. Mrs. Baker showed it to a jeweler who pronounced it genuine and offered her $50 for the stone. Another jeweler said that the diamond was worth $100.

Northfield.—Paving and ornamental street lights are probable improvements for this city next summer. At a recent meeting of the Civic association a committee was appointed to investigate the various kinds of paving and to formulate a definite proposition to put before the city council at its January meeting. A separate committee will investigate and report on ornamental lights.

Caledonia.—To improve the schools of Houston county, Superintendent-elect Marie Otterness proposes that districts containing twenty to thirty schools each be formed for administrative purposes. Each district should have a competent, well-paid supervisor, who will give his whole time to school improvement. The cost to the county of this system she estimates at $8,000 to $10,000 a year over the cost of the present system.

Park Rapids.—The new board of directors of the Commercial club organized by electing W. R. B. Smythe, president; M. M. Nygaard, vice-president; M. Schoneberger, treasurer; P. A. Walling, secretary, and C. A. Houston, director. The disbursements the past year amounted to $7,395.59. As a testimonial of approval of the work of the members of the old board the club by unanimous consent requested them to recommend their successors.

Lakefield.—Believing it will be a wise course for all concerned, the directors of the Jackson County Co-operative company, which operates one of the largest co-operative stores in the state, at Lakefield, has decided that, after Jan. 13, all of the business of the store shall be conducted on a strictly cash basis. The store has about eight hundred customers, and at the close of business on Dec. 1, there were outstanding accounts amounting to over $12,000.

St. Peter.—This city will have a Chautauqua week next summer. Members of the Commercial club have appointed a committee consisting of Phillip Dick, A. M. Jenson, Professor B. M. Cosgrove, William Malgren, M. B. Johnson, and J. A. Poetz, to negotiate with a lyceum bureau. Three different bureaus have submitted proposals to A. M. Jensen, president of the Commercial club, and it is expected there will be no difficulty in closing with one of them.

St. Cloud.—With the re-election of Fay Cravens of Milaca as president and Y. ORIGIN of the CHRISTMAS TREE

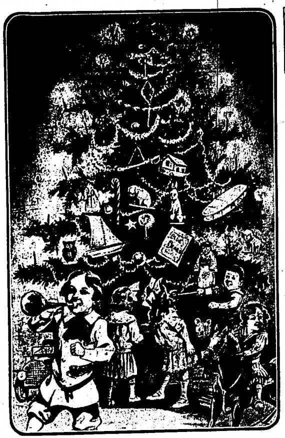
WHO invented the Christmas tree? Whence does it come? It is a curious fact that most of the old chroniclers have thrown a veil of mystery around the Christmas tree and make no attempt to explain its origin.

It has been stated that the tree came to us from Egypt. This legend is well propagated in old Irish and Welsh fairy tales. The idea is that in ancient Egypt they used a slip of the palm tree with twelve shoots on it at certain winter festivities. The tree symbolized the year with its twelve months.



Consequently, any one who is equal to the effort may believe that the modern Christmas tree represents that twelve-shooted slip of palm. Minds of less stalwart credulity may prefer to trace the Christmas tree back to Germany only, where they had Christmas trees long before they were ever heard of in this country or England or France.

The Christmas tree was not introduced into England from Germany until after the marriage of Queen Victoria to her German consort, Prince Albert. But where did the Germans get the Christmas tree idea from? S. J. Adair Fitz Gerald, writing in T. P.'s Weekly, offers an explanation of this by saying that far away back in the ages you find Teutons believing in a mystic ash tree, Yggdrasil, which, with its roots and branches, united the world of the living and the world of the dead. "At the foot of Yggdrasil sit the three Norns, who determine the destinies of men, and Yggdrasil's branches bear gifts for men to take."

Is that our Christmas tree? Anyhow, the idea that Prince Albert introduced it into Great Britain is very prevalent. One of the prettiest and most eagerly looked for events of the Christmastide—that of the setting up of the Christmas tree—is associated with the late Empress Frederick of Germany. Queen Victoria, after the birth of the princess royal, had Christmas celebrated at Windsor in 1840, and "on that occasion Prince Albert introduced the pretty German custom of decorating a Christmas tree. Since that period it has become a welcome custom for both rich and poor, and affords a graceful means of distributing little presents. It was probably first imported into Germany with the conquering legions of Drusus, and is alluded to by Virgil in the "Georgics."

It will be seen by this that the generally accepted notion is that Prince Albert was responsible for the British adoption of the pleasing tree and all that it means, symbolical and practical, to the youngsters. But on the threshold of this acceptation we are met with this statement from the "Greville Memoirs," under date Dec. 27, 1829, when Queen Victoria was yet but ten years old. "On Christmas day the Princess Lieven got up a little fete, such as is customary all over Germany. Three trees in great pots were put on a long table covered with linen; each tree was illuminated with three circular tiers of colored wax candles—blue, green, red and white. Before each was displayed a quantity of toys, gloves, handkerchiefs, workboxes, books and various articles, presents made to the owner of the tree." This princess was a Russian, and in her later days lived mostly in Paris. Then again Prof. Ditchfield, in his "Old English Customs," says that the Christmas tree was first imported into England by some German merchants who lived at Manchester in the first years of the nineteenth century.

In 1900 a writer on folklore said: "Although we are accustomed to consider Germany the home of the Christmas tree, it has not been general there for more than a couple of centuries. Old people are still living whose parents never saw one in Germany. The decoration of houses with olive leaves and green branches, as in England at Christmas, is a far more ancient custom, and can be noticed in Botticelli's picture of "The Adoration of the Shepherds," in the National Gallery in London. It is, as Fritz Ortwein observes, a distinct remnant of an ancient heathen custom, as at the turn of the year during the twelve days of the Jul festival in honor of Woden, greenery could be fetched by all from the woods without punishment, and every hall was decorated with green leaves and branches.

Again, in old works on English customs we find many references to the decorating of the interior of the dwellings, as well as the pious adornment of the churches with greenery, and the introduction of a fir tree as symbolical of the palm. In the halls of the barons and the squires and in the gigantic kitchens of the farmers a fir tree ever held prominent place, but whether ordinarily decorated or not is not specifically recorded. Here we are in doubt. In all probability the remaining fruits of the orchards of the year were hung upon the branches as a propitiation to the gods of the fruits of the earth to insure good harvests.

Going abroad we get fuller knowledge of these things. The custom of carrying away branches and trees from the woods at Christmas time in various parts of Austria became so extensive on account of the superstitions of the peasantry that at Salzburg, in 1755, and at Nuremberg, in 1768, severe by-laws were issued against persons purloining from the forests. In some regions of Hungary a solemn procession with a decorated tree takes place through each village before the shepheld play begins. "It is adorned with ribbons and fruit, and is supposed to symbolize the tree of knowledge. Although most of the Christian customs adhered to by the Austrian-German peasant can be traced back to heathenish Germanen rites, some dispute the use of a tree at the Jul festivities; nevertheless, it is certain that in Sweden needle pines and firs were set up at this time before the houses." Teutzel of Saxony, an antiquarian authority on these subjects, says: "The ancient heathen sat before their houses between two crossed pine trees and ate and drank at the turn of the year for nineteen days."

The Christmas tree was introduced into Austria some eighty years ago by a Duchess of Wurtemberg and spread throughout Germany. About 1840 it is supposed to have taken fresh root in England, and became highly popular. Both Thackeray and Dickens seized hold of the idea of happiness begot of Christmas gatherings and the Christmas tree, and Charles Dickens in 1850 used "The Christmas Tree" as a title for one of his annual stories.

Although Christmas was not celebrated in the first centuries of the Christian era, there are indications in the records of early Roman history of the setting up of a decorated tree at Christmas time and the presentation of gifts of fruit and toys. The Romans are supposed to have taken the idea from the early Egyptians.

Centuries old, the customs of Christmas observance have taken myriad forms in the various countries of the world. In many cases they perpetuate some ancient custom which long antedates the advent of Christianity. Such are the customs which have grown up around the mistletoe, worshiped by the ancient Druids of Britain as a sacred and magical plant. An old English writer, speaking of the Druids' celebration of the winter solstice, our Christmas, says:

"This was the most respectable festival of our Druids, called Yuletide; when the mistletoe, which they called all-heal, was carried in their hands and laid on their altars as an emblem of the salutiferous advent of Messiah. This mistletoe they cut off the trees with their upright hatchets of brass, called celts, put upon ends of their staffs, which they carried in their hands. Innumerable are these instruments found all over the British isles. The custom is still preserved, and lately at York on the eve of Christmas day they carry mistletoe to the high altar of the cathedral, and proclaim a public and universal liberty, pardon and freedom to all sorts of inferior and even wicked people, at the gates of the city, towards their four quarters of heaven."

The lore of the strange plant is prominently in evidence in the Voluspa and other Scandinavian Sagas. It was with a mistletoe branch—or an arrow prepared therefrom—that the blind and heavy-headed deity Hoder aimer his deadly blow at Balder, the god of light or benevolent principle of northern mythology. The inspiration of the use of the mistletoe was, of course, due to the opposing principle—of darkness or evil. The plant which furnished the deadly dart grew on the slope of Asgard, and was the sole agent known to gods or men—among poisonous plants—which had not given definite promise to Freya to prove harmless if used against the person of her son Balder. Thus Scandinavian mythical lore accounts for the death of the latter. And accordingly, a traditional idea of the poisonous properties of the mistletoe is found to persist in remote regions of the north and west of Europe, even to the present day. In Great Britain (in the Forest of Dean) it has been used down to recent date as a popular remedy in the treatment of cardiac troubles. Like the strophanthus of African arrow poison fame, it proved a reliable substitute for digitalis.

Kissing under the mistletoe is all that now remains of a once horrible Druid rite. The ceremonies which the mistletoe figured in among the ancient Druids always accorded it a place of honor. The myths that clung around it in their wondering, puzzling minds were many more than the few that have come to us in these later years. But, old as they are, those hoary, heathen myths lack the true flavor of antiquity when it comes to measuring traditions by the centuries.

Oh, we do not by any means owe our mistletoe to the Druids. We can go back so much further for the first adventures of the mistletoe that the Druids become merely modern innovators. It was one of the noblest of the trees in Paradise, the lordly tree of good and evil; and on its twig hung the apple which Mother Eve plucked with such disastrous consequences. Alas for Mother Eve and Father Adam! And alas for us, their punished heirs-at-law divine! But alas, too, for the wicked, handsome, tempting tree of knowledge which put humanity in such graceless plight! Upon its lofty crown, its massive trunk, its delicious fruit, descended the universal curse. It shriveled away from the horrified earth; it dwindled to the meanest smallness; it was cast out into the bitter cold; it became a parasite and beggar, existing by the bounty of vulgar neighbors. Only in the pearly translucence of its shrunken fruit, the most trivial of berries, did it preserve some semblance of its once radiant splendor.

And it has preserved some of its pristine virtues, too, in traditional Christian lore, as if it were still hedged about with a vestige of the glory that arrayed it in Paradise.

Time was, and time is now, when epilepsy is one of the scourges of mankind; only now we look for its cure, as we look for its cause, in quite natural means and conditions. The notion that some poor devil with the falling sickness has been cursed from on high is held scarcely compatible, in popular science, with the principles of eternal justice or with cold observation of cause and effect.

But in times that were, in Wales, when an epileptic developed the symptoms characteristic of the disorder, it was commonly believed that he was being scourged with the "rod of Christ," and that was the name by which the disease went, although it had another designation as well—St. Valentine's sickness. The cure for it was believed to lie in the Rod of Jesse. The use of the mistletoe as the Rod of Jesse in epilepsy was general and, if faith can work wonders, perhaps the miracle of cure did sometimes attend its employment.

Perhaps it didn't, if hard-headed science choose to take a shy at that gracious addition to the list of miracle-working agents. But whether it did or didn't the mistletoe's rare birth and fruition still carry with them the tenderest of Christian faiths, as they carry, too, the story of humanity's most far-reaching disaster. It is one of the Christmas greens which has the warrant of religious associations dating back to the very beginnings of man's creation, even as it is accorded the sublime honor of typifying the ancestral origins of the Redeemer of Man himself.

But what about the mistletoe kiss?

Hm! To tell the truth, if we want to be consistently Christian in our Christmas greens and the purposes to which they should be put, there isn't anything about it, at least of any records which such careful investigators as Alfred E. P. Raymond Dowling have dug up while studying the general subject. None will deny that the most consistent Christians have taken to the mistletoe kiss with abundant enthusiasm and a faith in its excellent results that has never been surpassed. But that doesn't make the mistletoe kiss any more Christian than it ever was.

Isn't the excellent story of foolish Mother Eve and the original mistletoe apple enough for any reasonable Christmas decorator who wants to justify its employment? And if it isn't, haven't we the legend of the Rod of Jesse to make it distinctly one of the Christmas greens? As for the kisses that are supposed to go with it—well, if you insist on knowing about them, you'll simply have to take the consequences, same as Eve did when she insisted on tasting of that confounded tree of knowledge.

The mistletoe kiss seems not to be Christian at all—Druidical, probably, and therefore heathenish, and therefore very, very wrong. So, all young men who encounter it, artfully suspended where a pair of ripe, red lips must pass, do you piously refrain or, more piously, tear down the hoary old temptation and flee the accursed roof, as if it were the house of Arria Marcella and you were not Gautier's young Frenchman. And you, maidens, give leave to no pagan rites; remember the fate of your poor Grandmother Eve and beware lest the fruit of the mistletoe, accursed tree of knowledge, prove now more bitter in the mouth than it did in Eden.

But if you have ivy, wreathe it generously, for the French know it as the herb of St. John, the disciple whom the Savior loved, the emblem of pure friendship, the vine that heeds not decay and death of its beloved, but clings ever more closely as the fall impends and bears up its falling ally against all adversity. Learned students of these legends have surmised, too, that it may be the herb of St. John the Baptist, who is usually pictured as the boy in his camel's-hair coat, gazing at his cousin, the infant Jesus.

His Presentation Speech

The winning grace and youthful dignity with which children often fulfill their part on occasions of civic, state or royal pageantry is one of the most charming features of such occasions. Sometimes, indeed, the little folk do not behave exactly as they are expected to do; but they are as likely to improve on the original program as to spoil it.

In Italy in the days when the present Dowager Queen Margherita was the lovely young bride of the crown prince, a little anecdote of her reception in one of the hill towns was current alike in society and in the press. The little boy who was to present the usual bouquet was the son of a distinguished literary man, and he had been taught a pretty poem of a few lines, in graceful praise of the princess. But when the moment came to recite, he stood mutely gazing at her, too overcome to speak. After a moment, in order to relieve the situation, the princess smiled, and held out her hand for the flowers. The little fellow held back for a moment, then, to the delight of the assembly, explained, confidentially, as he gave the flowers to her.

"There were verses, but you are so beautiful I can't remember them."—Youth's Companion.

Wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss, but cheerily seek how to redress their harms.—Shakespeare.

Lucky.

"Thousands of years ago men shaved themselves with sharks' teeth or with pieces of flint," said the young man who had been reading the "Notes of Science."

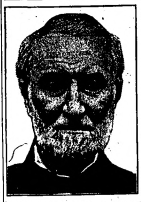
"How lucky," replied the fair maiden.

"Lucky? Why so?"

"I mean how lucky it is they have got to making razors in Germany. Otherwise the poor men would still have to shave with sharks' teeth and pieces of flint, wouldn't they?"

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

PASSING OF UNIQUE UNCLE JOE CANNON



The defeat of Uncle Joe Cannon for re-election will remove from Congress one of the most picturesque characters in the last half century of American politics. Whatever storms may have arisen over Mr. Cannon's official acts and political opinions, and they have been many in recent years, nobody ever attempted to dispute the fact that Uncle Joe has stood alone, a unique figure in the life of the national capital.

Able, forceful, a born fighter and one of the homeliest and most lovable of men, the passing of Uncle Joe Cannon and his inseparable cigar will leave a void, at least for folks who thought they could see in him the typical rough and ready American politician of earlier days.

When the former speaker closes his public career on March 4, 1913, he will have served longer as a member of the house of representatives than any other man. It will have been forty years since he first took his seat in that body, and during that time he was a candidate twenty times and elected nineteen times.

He entered the house when James G. Blaine was speaker. His only defeat until adverse political fortune overtook him this fall was in 1890.

But Uncle Joe has established a record in another respect. He served longer consecutively as speaker of the house than any other man. The aggregate of Henry Clay's broken terms as presiding officer of the lower branch of congress exceeded Mr. Cannon's period of office, but only by a year.

Uncle Joe will be seventy-seven years old next May. He has no intention of ever again seeking office. He probably wouldn't accept another nomination. He didn't want the last nomination.

SPRING-RICE NEW BRITISH AMBASSADOR

It is said Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the new British ambassador at Washington, like his predecessor, Mr. Bryce, believes the Panama canal problem is soluble, and that he is imbued with pronounced American sympathies.

Moreover, he was the principal lieutenant of his chief, the late Lord Pauncefote, in the negotiation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, on the subject of the Panama canal, the interpretation of which constitutes the basis of the differences which have lately arisen. Indeed, he is generally understood to have drafted the greater part, if not the whole, of that instrument.

His appointment, therefore, is particularly appropriate, and it is certain that the same diplomat who helped to negotiate the Hay-Pauncefote treaty in the place of the objectionable Clayton-Bulwer agreement, with the object of promoting friendship between Great Britain and the United States, will now know how to construe in the happiest manner for both countries the questions which have arisen in connection with what is, after all, in a sense, his own offspring.

Sir Cecil, a man of most conciliatory disposition and agreeable manner, was last in this country in February, 1905, at the moment when the great powers were beginning to take steps to bring the war between Japan and Russia to a close. He was then councilor of the British embassy at Berlin.

QUEEN DONS APRON; LABORS FOR POOR

The busiest of a small gathering of workers who were occupied the other day at the imperial institute in unpacking, sorting and repacking many thousands of useful winter garments for the poor was Queen Mary. It was shortly after noon when her majesty arrived, and it was not until nearly 4 o'clock that the royal carriage arrived to take her back to Buckingham palace.

Throughout the whole of this time, with only a short interval for a little lunch at 1:30 o'clock, the queen, assisted by her ladies in waiting, Lady Bertha Dawkins and Lady Katherine Coke, and a few privileged gentlewomen, together with several old and trusted royal servants, was supervising this labor of love for the poor.

In setting this example to the women of England her majesty was no mere figurehead. She inspected every crate, bale and package as the men unpacked them in the north gallery of the institute, and was as busy and enthusiastic about her work as any of her little band of helpers.

Boxes and crates of all sizes were lying about in heaps on all sides, and as they were dismantled under the eyes of the queen the articles they contained were placed on long rows of tables, which occupied the whole length of the north gallery. Her majesty herself, after greeting the ladies with a smile and a handshake, soon after her arrival took off her hat and furs and put on a pair of working gloves.

Then, further equipping herself with a business-like apron over the front of her walking skirt and a pair of small but serviceable scissors, she set to work and directed the operations.

BRAKEMAN ELECTED COUNTY TREASURER

From helper in a round house to county treasurer is a part of the life story of Samuel J. Bryan, Democratic treasurer-elect of El Paso county, Colorado.

Crippled in a railroad wreck six years ago and so seriously injured that surgeons declared he could not survive, handicapped by lack of education, Bryan's steady climb up the ladder is referred to by his friends as an example of what pluck and perseverance will do. Bryan's friends gave him a plurality of nearly 1,000.

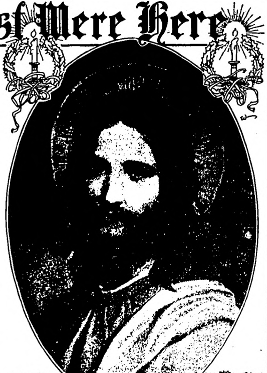
When he was working as a brakeman about six years ago, Bryan was knocked under the cars in a wreck. Both legs were cut off and other injuries were such that death was only a matter of hours, the surgeons declared.

But Bryan had a strong desire to live. He passed two years on a hospital cot, during which time he underwent eight operations. Then he decided to quit the dangerous work of railroading, but feared his lack of education would prove a big handicap. His wife urged him to devote his time to study, and between them they decided upon a course in bookkeeping and accounting. Bryan made rapid progress in his studies, invested his savings in cork limbs, and started out after leaving the hospital to find a job.

His friends of the road elected him secretary and treasurer of the Order of Trainmen, and his work in that capacity was performed so satisfactorily that other lodges elected him to similar offices. Bryan wasn't satisfied to be a lodge clerk long, however. Two years ago friends urged him to run for the office of justice of the peace. He demurred, because he knew nothing about law, and even justices, he thought, should know something of jurisprudence.

Again Bryan and his wife discussed matters, and he decided to study criminal and civil legal practice. After completing the course he ran for office and was elected by a big majority.

If Christ Were Here



IS Christmas a season of plenty? Face to face with this timely question I have been thinking of the households in our cities. In many of them, I know, the tables will groan under an array of substantials and dainties, tasteful enough to make the mouth of an epicure water. There will be that lovely loan from the pretty customs of the German fatherland — the Christmas tree—laden with its numerous gifts for family and friends; the little ones will rejoice in toys and candies, those a bit older, in a wealth of books and games, while fathers and mothers will have exhausted their ingenuity in discovering each others desires and those of their children in order that all may be gratified on this anniversary of Christ's coming. In well-ordered households those who serve the family will be welcomed around the tree and merriment and song will add to the gayety. If he in whose name it will all be done were right here in the midst of them, what more could he ask?

And I dreamed a dream—that he had come once more upon earth, had come right down among us and was looking with eyes of deep questioning at what was being done in honor of his former coming.

And as he walked around hidden from all eyes but mine own, his glance seemed to pierce beneath the seeming and reach the heart of the festival. He passed by the well-warmed and lighted homes, where all was happiness and content; he went into the places where those of whom he said "Of such is the kingdom of God" were playing in the path of death, and his glance was stern as he saw one of "these little ones" sweep into eternity beneath the iron wheels which crushed its tiny form almost out of all semblance of the beauty and sweetness which belonged to it. His look said: "What gift has been given to this child in honor of my birthday? Has it had not even that right of every creature, a safe place to expand its nature in the play which it must have in order to grow?"

And he went among the homes of those who serve the people in the marts of trade, great and small. Surely there we would find the Chirstmas good cheer of which I had been thinking. But in too many households we found only worry and anxious care for the morrow and for the health of those who were tired almost to death after their long hours of labor for the thankless, rushing crowd of searchers after "Christmas gifts;" they were not thinking of Christmas festivities, but only "Lord, give rest and bread to eat—rest, Lord, rest."

We left the middle-class homes and wandered on our quest into that great neighborhood of the weavers, men and women by the thousands, who in the best of times can never be sure that the wolf is far from their doors, and who, during these late years of costly living, have not often seen the best of times. There were attempts in many humble homes to celebrate the coming of the Prince of Peace, but, oh, how pitiful was their setting forth of the good things we all think belong of necessity to this blessed season!

"What are you doing to these my little ones?" said the sad eyes with the deep questioning look. "Is this the best you can give them in honor of me? Why, these are no longer children; they are dwarfed men and women, with the spirit of play gone from them and the weight of years upon them in their very childhood."

And he went farther among the weavers, and came to the homes of those who had abandoned all hope of better times; the homes where the season of Christ's birth could not be celebrated for even their utmost efforts could not still the howl of the wolf right upon them, not at, but within the door. Theirs was the cry of the poor women of the roads in the German fatherland in a century long gone by, to the appeal of the priest who consecrated his life to such as they. "Give us only bread and water, and we will follow thee." And these poor households said, "Give us to know where tomorrow's bread is to come from, and we will be happy and make a festival for thee; all we ask it to be free from the wolf; we are willing to work, but work is not plentiful enough, and some of us must always go hungry." And the face of the Christ grew sadder.

And we passed into the home of one of those whose grief must be greater than that of her from whom death has taken the husband and the father of her little ones; of one from whom the man has gone away, leaving the woman to fight singlehanded against the wolf. The effort there to keep up heart and to hold together the children in the home, with the handicap of the lower wage which is meted out to the working woman, seemed even more desperate. The little ones looked hungry; the Christmas tree had shrunk to a tiny sprig of green; there was little light, and it was, oh, so cold, and the tiny babe on the mother's arm was the only soul that smiled. And this at the time of plenty, when all should rejoice! Is the mother at work at a time like this? Yes, in spite of all the world has to tell us of "sacred motherhood," the woman with the babe on her arm is not exempt from this harsh demand, and at work she must be, even on this day of days, or risk the dole which is all that stands between her children and the wolf.

And deep in the saddened eyes of the Christ I read the condemnation and the question: He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

Is the rush of the gift-buying a sign either that there is plenty in the land or that we really love to celebrate the birthday of the Christ? If you think so, listen to the groans of the overburdened father of the family when approached with the request for Christmas moneys; hear what weary women say to each other in passing concerning the unwelcome necessity of "exchanging gifts" with so many people "who look for something from you." What of the original spirit of Christmas is there left in this "exchange," this giving in the expectation of a return in kind? Thousands upon thousands of gifts are "exchanged" by people who bought them with the money which was really needed for the daily uses of their own households, bought them grudgingly in servitude to custom and without a particle of real Christmas spirit accompanying the selection or the giving.

But this is not the worst of it; the children, even, have come to know in many families that the gifts to those outside the family circle are given not because of a loving desire to give, but in the spirit represented by "that wicked dollar," which Emerson said was given in order to save himself the unpleasantness of refusing or the trouble of investigating some demand made upon him. Which has the better claim upon the time and the purse of the man of small means—those dear to him who actually need comforts, or the richer friend who in no sense needs the thing sent and who in turn will feel obliged to make a gift to keep his record clear? Shame upon the weakness which forces the "exchange" of what should be an outpouring of good feeling or else has absolutely no raison d'etre.

But is there any righteousness in the feeling of smug comfort in the homes of the well-to-do at the Christmas season? Is the full table and the joy of one's own household a fair offering in honor of him whose coming we are supposed to be celebrating?

While we are pretending to be a Christian community what are we doing to the weak and the helpless? Can there be any greater wrong to the children of any community than to permit the years during which they should be laying the foundations of knowledge most easily, to find them so crowded by thousands out of the schools or sitting on the window ledges or (with doubly worked teachers trying to instruct two sets of youngsters) on "half time"? And yet we go calmly on year after year permitting money to be misused while the little children pay the bills in wasted years; and then, when Christmas comes, the children's festival par excellence, we lift up our eyes to heaven with the prayer of the Pharisee and rejoice over the Christmas season and its joy for the children! Can there be any neglect of the commonwealth's interests greater and with results more lasting, than our failure to consider every child an asset to be treasured and and appreciated, to be educated to its utmost possibilities?

We are all prone, men and women alike, to look mostly at immediate effects. If some one we know goes out to nurse a poorer neighbor stricken down with typhoid or any of the other preventable diseases, we exclaim over the lovely charity of the action and praise the kindness of heart which prompted it. "That," says the average person, "is true charity and neighborly love." But if that kindly woman were to give half the time and effort to help along a crusade for pure water or for the prevention of consumption or for the cleaning up of a pestilent neighborhood, she would probably be called by those immediately around her, if not a muckraker, at least an uncomfortably active reformer. Yet the prevention of the illness would mean more to the poorer neighbor than all the kindly nursing during its continuance. All we may do in the way of juvenile courts for the young offenders is not to be compared with giving them just their bare right to playgrounds and good teaching, with plenty of room for all and well paid teachers to work for and with them.

When we know that the coming of Christmas, the children's festival, is going to make all the young boxmakers in our city slave extra long hours, in order to fill the rush orders of the season, shall we not be shaken out of our smug rejoicing over this as a time of plenty for all?

Not enough schools for the city's children; not enough food for them, even when they do get into the schools; not enough wages for their parents to enable the mothers to remain in the homes to look after them; not enough money spent by the municipality to give them places to play in safety; not enough care for their lives to clean up the neighborhoods in which they fairly swarm; not enough Christmas joy to go round to all the city's children—such is our record as we prepare to celebrate with merriment and feasting the advent of the Christ Child. Is it a record of which we dare be proud? May we offer it as a meet festival in honor of the coming into our world of him who said: Whosoever shall cause one of these little ones that believes on me to stumble, it were better for him if a great millstone were hanged about his neck and he were cast into the sea."

Who lives for humanity must be content to lose himself.—Frothingham.

TRUST HIS LOVE

They are few who have not sometimes, said like Jaob, "All these things are against me." We cannot wonder that he thought so; but he was mistaken. They were working for his good, and the time came when he knew it. We cannot see the bright light that is in the storms that afflict us, and our faith is so small that our hearts are troubled. But when our spirit is overwhelmed within us God knows our path. The deepest lessons, and the most salutary, of our lives come through our adversities. An thlete cannot be trained without difficult exercises, the mind is developed by hard studies, the heart is enlarged and humbled and purified by affliction. Our transient troubles are working for us "more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory." Our faith is small because the temporal has too strong a hold on us. If our vision were always fixed on the things not seen and eternal we would rejoice in our tribulation. One of the greatest goods of life is the severity of its spiritual discipline. To those who trust him God gives the treasures of darkness and hidden riches of secret places. We cannot comprehend his perfect plan for our lives, but it is our blessed privilege to trust his unerring wisdom and his infinite love.

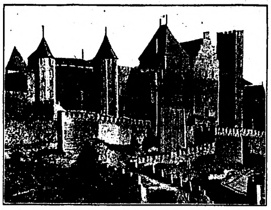
"More Nat'ral."

In Denver there is said to be a parvenu nabob who ordered for himself, through a friend in New York, a half-dozen pieces of the finest statuary in the metropolis. When they arrived, they all proved to be bronze. The nabob was greatly disgusted. The statuary of his neighbor, whom he was imitating or trying to excel, was of marble. Of course, that was the proper thing. He retired that night in a mood of great displeasure. Next morning, before the sun was up, he went out on his lawn, bucket and paint brush in hand, and painted white each piece of the new bronze statuary. He was at work on "Venus at Her Bath," when his friend, who had purchased the artistic images for him, happened along and inquired in dismay what he was doing. Said the man of wealth: "Do you suppose I want any Ute squaws in my yard? Not by a —— sight!" The friend amusedly watched the artist until he had completed the job of giving the shapely Venus a flesh coloring. Then stepping back, he viewed the effect of his work critically a moment, went into the house, and, returning with a pot of colored paint, commenced to decorate the limbs of Venus with red garters. The effect very much pleased the manipulator of the brush, because he said it made it appear "more nat'ral-like."

Every woman whose husband is a failure is sure he would have been a howling success had he followed her advice.

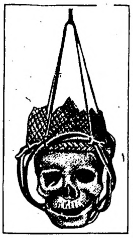
OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Castle of Carcassonne



The famous and most picturesque castle and fortress of Carcassonne, now the property of the French republic, are built on a steep escarpment which commands the road from Toulouse to Narbonne along the valley of the river Aude, between the Black mountains to the north, and the foothills of the Pyrenees, which overshadow Foix, to the southwards. This splendid citadel, therefore, not only holds a valley which leads from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic, but also guards the approaches from Spain into France. Though the Romans preferred the coastwise city of Narbonne as their center in this district, the Visigoths who followed them immediately recognized the natural strength and strategical importance of the site, and elevated what had been merely a camp for their predecessors into a fortalice of magnificent dimensions and well-nigh impregnable power, which proved too much for Clovis when he tried to take the place in the year 508. At the end of the sixth century the Visigoths still kept a stronghold which was theirs until their kingdom fell before the Moors in 713, and after that date there seem to have been no important additions made to the fortifications until the beginning of the twelfth century. The castle itself was built in 1130. The Visigoth towers of the fortifications were built by Theodoric upon square Roman substructures soon after 436, and were repaired in the thirteenth century. The fortress has withstood many sieges.

LOVE TOKEN OF THE DYAKS



In Borneo the most acceptable love offering in courtship is a human head captured by the Dyak wooer from some enemy and presented to the maid of his choice as proof of his prowess and his ability to take care of a wife. After the head has been taken a crown of finely woven palm leaf is made for it and then it is slowly dried over a fire.

DOG THAT SMOKES THE PIPE

"That dog is the champion pipe smoker of the south, and in the winter he wears overalls and a jumper, and he's got more sense than half the men in town," said John Fortunate, "head catcher" for the new dog wagon of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals of New Orleans, when the vehicle stopped in front of the side entrance to the City hall the other morning.

FATAL ERROR OF THE GOAT

Jim, a goat belonging to John Dunzan, farmer of Willow Brook, S. I., meandered into a junk pile to get his Sunday dinner. He came upon what looked like a tempting section of black rubber hose and swallowed it. That was a very serious error for James to make, for the apparent hose was an active blacksnake, which in the process of being digested choked the goat to death.

BEES TRAIL HONEY THIEVES

When J. M. Cornelius, a honey producer near Sterling, Colo., awoke one recent morning he found that in the night 15 bee hives had been looted of 50 pounds of honey. He followed the dispossessed bees to the home of two brothers named Bennett, living a mile away. There he found the bees swarming about the house, while the Bennetts, besieged, had shut the doors and windows and were afraid to go out. Cornelius swore out warrants for the arrest of the Bennetts. They admitted the theft.

TRACED BY TRAIL OF SUGAR

A trail of sugar leading from the warehouse of the Anchor line in Chicago led to the arrest of George Goodwin, who was caught in the act of carrying away a 100-pound sack of sugar. Goodwin was unaware that a small hole in one corner of the sack allowed a small stream of the contents to trickle out. He had scarcely gone three blocks when he was overtaken by John Ohnesorg, a watchman, who found a window of the warehouse open and discovered the sugar trail.

BIRD NEST WELL FORTIFIED

One of the most curiously constructed bird's nests ever seen in Denver is on exhibition at the home of the Denver Dumb Friends' league. It was picked up by Dr. John M. Gower on the sidewalk in front of the court house, where the wind had evidently blown it.

The nest is a sparrow's and its maker was preparing against the attack of his inherent enemy—man. It might be called a fortified nest. It is made of old sweepings with hairpins and nails woven in at the sides.

The points of the pins and the nails stick outward and remind one of rifles sticking through the portholes of a fortification.

END A 16-YEAR-OLD SMOKE

E. V. McKee of Clifton Heights, Pa., has just finished smoking a cigar which he lighted in 1896, when Bryan was defeated by McKinley for president. McKee is an ardent admirer of the Commoner, and when Bryan was defeated he lighted a cigar, which he threw to the floor. Thomas Gaffney picked up the cigar, put it in an envelope and kept it for McKee, telling him he could smoke it when a Democratic president was elected.

HE GOES BLIND AT NIGHT

Edward R. Stults, twenty years old, of Trenton, is afflicted with a peculiar form of blindness. While daylight prevails Stults is able to work and can distinguish objects plainly. With dusk, however, he becomes totally blind. Stults is one of a family of six children, three boys and three girls, and while all the boys were born sightless, the girls possess perfect vision.

CALF BORN WITH DOG FACE

A dog-faced calf was born on the farm of Henry Krekelberg, near Perham, Minn., recently. The animal bore a startling resemblance to a dog, but unfortunately the carcass was not preserved. It had the long, narrow muzzle of a dog, droopy ears like a water spaniel, long lips and the teeth on the lower jaw were of the canine variety.

HENS ACQUIRE A PLUM JAG

Mrs. Harry Stevens of Sabatis, Me., is a member of the Women's Christian Temperance union, and so she was terribly shocked the other day to observe that all her hens were staggering around the yard in a disgraceful state of intoxication. Where did they get the liquor?

Mrs. Stevens had preserved a lot of plums, but every jar of them fermented, and she threw them into the waste, and the hens gobbled the lot. That was the answer.

The most staid and respectable of the biddies were soon teetering 'round as if on springs, making vain stabs at imaginary worms, while the roosters strutted unsteadily about and crowed hilariously. One hen died from the effects of her debauch.

SOME PECULIAR BELIEFS

The Fijian cannibal's emotions have reference for the greater part to food, so he worships the god Matawaloo, who has eight stomachs and is always eating.

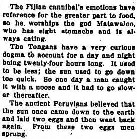
The Tongans have a very curious dogma to account for a day and night being twenty-four hours long. It used to be less; the sun used to go down too quick. So one day a man caught it with a noose and it had to go slower thereafter.

The ancient Peruvians believed that the sun once came down to the earth and laid two eggs and then went back again. From these two eggs men sprung.

The American Indians had a dogma that the sun was the one supreme god, and the moon was his wife. One tribe inhabiting a fearfully hot district worshiped the moon alone, saying that they had no use for the sun.

In the days of Columbus scientific dogmas asserted: If a ship should reach India it could never get back again, because the rotundity of the globe would present a kind of mountain, up which it would be impossible to sail even with the most favorable wind.

STONE STAIRS IN KENTUCKY



Located in the fastnesses of the Kentucky forest, the high stone steps shown in the illustration stand out among the wonders and curiosities of old Kentucky. For unknown years this piece of man's handiwork has stood the storms of winter and is today in a fair state of preservation. Many people climb to the top and view the beautiful panorama of the surrounding country. The steps, 53 in number, were hewn out of the hillside by brawny Kentucky pioneers. They are about 50 feet high and are located on Paul river near Rockport, Ky. Naturally many myths and traditions have gathered about the old stairway during the flight of the years.

THINGS YOU MAY NOT KNOW

Fish have no eyelids. They do not require them, as their eyes are constantly washed by the water in which they swim.

Bismuth and nickel steel both have the curious property of expanding when they cool instead of contracting like other metals.

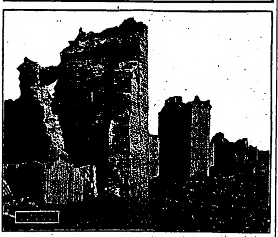
At St. Petersburg there is a clock with ninety-five faces. It tells the time of the day at thirty different places in the world, and the movement of the earth and other planets.

Experiments with thousands of subjects have shown that the average man attains his maximum strength in his thirty-first year.

CHICKEN HAD TWO HEARTS

Mrs. Alonzo Fisher of Muncie, Ind., dressing a chicken for dinner, was surprised to find that it contained two hearts, the organs lying side by side, and being of the same general size and appearance. A physician who examined the freak said both organs evidently had been used in pumping blood. The fowl was pronounced perfectly healthy and normal, except for the extra heart.

Walls of Constantinople



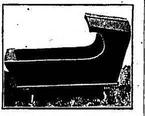
The Theodosian wall of Constantinople extends for five miles from the Sea of Marmora to the Golden Horn, enclosing the greater part of the city between it and the waters. It had 116 fighting towers originally, of which about ninety still stand, though badly dilapidated. The whole wall, indeed, is crumbling and would be no protection against modern artillery.

OLD FENNO HOUSE

Structure Erected in New England 208 Years Ago.

First Settler of Canton Astonished the Natives by Putting a Second Story Upon the Dwelling—Structure is Still Standing.

Canton.—The Fenno house, on Farm street, Canton, is one of the venerable old dwelling houses of New England whose age is fully authenticated by documentary evidence as well as by family tradition. This rather small structure, two stories in height, painted red, and upon whose sides are still the original clapboards of 1704, was built 208 years ago by that John Fenno who was the original Stoughton, now Canton, settler of that name. It was John Fenno's father, also John Fenno, who was a resident of Old Dorchester, who purchased the Roger Clapp farm in 1694. This original Clapp property, which was a part of the lands of the Ponkapoag tribe of Indians, contained 500 acres, and John Fenno bought the whole area for 100 pounds, or at the rate of five acres per pound. Upon this land, before a road of any description ran alongside of it or through it, the second John Fenno built this 1704 house, and he astonished the natives by putting a second story, a then unheard of luxury, to his new home. In this house there were born nine children who, with the wife and mother, who was Rachel Newcomb of Braintree, constituted the original family which lived on the premises. This second John Fenno died in 1711, and he was succeeded by Isaac, his son, who was born—in the same old house—in 1699. Isaac Fenno was twice married. His first wife was Hannah Puffer, who in 1731, died at the age of twenty-one and left a son and a daughter, Elizabeth—Mrs. Matthew Buck—and a junior Isaac. The second wife was Mary Niles of Canton, and she became the mother of three daughters. The son, Isaac, by the first wife, married Mary Davenport of Canton in 1754, and he made his home in the same old house, with his father, the first Isaac. But young Isaac was killed by falling from "a steeple of a meeting house" in October, 1762. Two sons were the fruits of this marriage of Isaac, the younger, with Mary Davenport, and both of them, Enoch and Elijah, became Revolutionary soldiers. Elijah was the son of a soldier veteran who maintained the family line in the old red house, for Elijah and his wife, Abigail Smith, became the parents of five children who were all doubtless rocked to sleep in the same old ancestral cradle which is still a part of the original furniture of the place. Among the five children of Elijah Fenno was Jesse, who was born in 1785. But Jesse, when he reached man's estate, while he chose to remain on the family farm, built for himself a new house in 1810, near the old red homestead, and which is today the abode of the descendants in the seventh generation of the original 1704 John Fenno. So far as known this 1704 house has not been regularly tenanted, at least by the Fennos, for a great many years, and the musty old apartments, of the first floor, are utilized as receptacles for discarded articles of every description. The gigantic fireplace, large enough to take in an ox for a back log, if need be, is still there in all its ample proportion. In the fireplace hangs the same old crane which has sustained so many pots and kettles in the early days. In the shed of humble proportions, which is attached to the house, is a huge receptacle, with heavy unliftable covers, which must have served the purpose of an ice chest, or family cooler. An interesting relic is a shoemaker's bench with much of the furniture appertaining thereto. The particular generation of Fennos which began to make shoes for itself is unknown. At the rear of the yard stands the corn crib. Further along, down the lane, in the direction of Ponkapoag pond, is the well where the cows were watered. Then there are spinning wheels, kettles without labels to tell what they are, chairs, sofas, and all the varied stock of discarded utensils, which must have a historical value, but of whose history there is no one to relate. At the rear sides of the house there are the same hewn clapboards of varied dimensions, which the 1705 John Fenno caused to be placed thereon, and perhaps John himself drove some of the nails. Altogether this old 1704 family shelter is an interesting house for the inspection of antiquarians and all other persons whose attention might be attracted by the venerable landmark.



Fenno Cradle of Five Generations.

Merry Christmas.

It is stated that a case has already been invented for carrying eggs by parcel post. Wonder if the rural mail carrier will appreciate that?

Henry Rines, who is to be speaker by the unanimous vote of the republicans, was father of the county option bill at the last session of the legislature. This does not necessarily mean county option, but it is a whole wagon load of straws.

The Bemidji Sentinel is urging the appointment of D. P. O'Neill as chairman of the reapportoinment committee. It says: Our own representative, D. P. O'Neill of Thief River Falls, a farmer by occupation, is geographically, morally, physically and mentally in line to send so fair a bill through the house that the senate could not turn it down.

Under the parcels post law packages "will be mailable only at postoffice, branch offices, lettered and local named stations, and such numbered stations as may be designated by the postmaster." We suppose that postmasters will designate rural boxes as numbered stations under this regulation. The law certainly implies clearly that parcels are to be received along rural routes by providing a special rate on matter mailed on a rural route for delivery at another point on that route.

The Power of the Money Kings

Charts presented to the the house money trust investigation committee Wednesday show;

That eighteen leading financial firms, of which J. P. Morgan is one, have 746 directors in 134 railroads, financial and industrial corporations representing an aggregate of twenty-five billion, eight hundred and twenty-five million dollars.

That condensing the list of those who control the financial resources of the country it appears that J. P. Morgan & Co., the First National bank, the National City bank, the Guaranty Trust company and the Bankers' Trust company, all of New York, are represented by 341 directors in various corporations that have an aggregate of twenty-two billion, two hundred and forty-five million dollars.

That still further condensing the list it is found that the Morgan company, the Guaranty trust, the Bankers' trust, and the First National bank are represented by 229 directors on the boards of corporations.

That the leading financial institutions haue many directors in common, forming an interlocking system that binds the great financial interests together.

Judges on the Rule of Precedent

Two Minnesota judges are quoted as condemning the neglect of principle, reason, and logic by the legal profession, and the habit of appealing to mere precedent. These judges wish the law reports could be burned, and the lawyers forced to do a little independent thinking.

There is much truth in these expressions. But do not judges err on the same side? Is not the average judge apt to ask, "What is your authority?" Are not judges afraid of violating precedents?

The movement back to principles and rules of reason can equity and be started by the more independent and forceful of the judges themselves. It lies with them, very largely, to discourage voluminous, padded briefs, wearisome citations, and the filing of reference upon reference. They can ask the lawyers to boil down their arguments and to rely upon fundamental principles as illustrated by two or three important cases. The campaign against too much precedent and too little reason should, perhaps, be opened by the supreme courts. The average trial judge may hesitate to make enemies among the lawyers and the politicians by attempting revolutionary reforms.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Notice for Bids

Notice is hereby given that there will be a meeting of the village council of the village of St. Hilaire at the village hall in said village on the 30th day of December, 1912, at 8 o'clock p. m. of that day, forthe purpose of opening and considering bids for the purchase of the $4,000 in bonds authorized to be issued by said village at a special meeting of the qualified electors thereof held on the 9th day of November, 1912. All bids for the purchase of said bonds must be filed with the village recorder of said village prior to the hour of the meeting of the village council, and the village council reserves the right to reject any or all bids that may be offered. Said bonds will bear six (6) per cent interest, payable annually, and will run for fifteen years from the day of the date thereof, and all issued for the purpose of refunding the floating indebtedness of said village.

Dated at St. Hilaire, Minnesota, this 30th day of December, A. D. 1912.

Village Recorder.

Rural School Notes

Attention of teachers and school officers is called to the following announcement by the state superintendent of public instruction:

STATE AID

"Attention is directed to one additional requirement for the receiving of state aid in semigraded and in rural schools of classes A, B, and C."

PRIMARY MATERIAL

Ample material for seat work in primary grades must be provided—at least $10 for each school. It is desirable that this rule should affect the provision of this material in the schools during this present school year. Beginning with the school year 1913-1914 the rule will be uniformly enforced."

As I understand this regulation it means that those schools having money appropriated and on hand in the treasury for this purpose must buy the material needed for busy work; those schools having no funds will be required to comply with the regulations for next year, hence to appropriate money therefor at the next annual meeting.

COMMON SCHOOL CERTIFICATES

"A revised edition of rules relating to examinations and certificates will be ready for distribution before Jan. 1. One new statement in the rules will be that a credit in Plane Geometry will be required for a first grade certificate; no substitute credit or additional examination will be accepted for that subject after August, 1913.

That department plans to postpone the teachers' examination which has been held in February until May. This was done in 1911. It may be thought desirable later, if found practicable, to offer no written examination for certificates until August, 1913."

Trustees and school boards for state aided schools will kindly note these statements and be governed accordingly.

Your school superintendent has been busy visiting schools the last week. As a general rule teachers and pupils are doing good work. I will not insist (?) on good roads, but I do want to see these school houses filled with children, so that the splendid fall weather can be conducive to good school work.

In some instances school clerks have not turned over to teachers blanks and supplies sent out from this office Please see that this is done.

A merry Christmas to teachers and schools.

Respectfully. E. A. MOSTUE.

Larson—Erickson

A pretty wedding took place on Thursday afternoon, December 19, at 1 o'clock, when Elsie Erickson became the bride of Mr. Gust Larson. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Albert Larson, while the bridal party entered and took their places beneath the wedding bell. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. L. Larson of Warren, Minn.

The bride wore a dress of white crepe-de-chine with veil, carrying bridal roses and lilies of the valley. The bride was attended by Julia Bjornquist, who wore a dress of white serge, carrying pink and white carnations. Mr. Paul Thyren acted as best man.

After the cermony a very interesting poem was composed and given by Mr. Blixt, after which a delicious four course dinner was served. The afternoon was spent in conversation and song. After which the happy couple left that same evening.

Their many friends and relatives wish them a long and happy life.

School Notes

Thursday evening the pupils of the eight and ninth grades went for a sleigh ride, given by the professor. Leaving town at 8 o'clock, they drove out to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Aubol, where after playing many games, a lunch was served. They returned home having spent an enjoyable evening.

The Owl literary society gave a program Friday afternoon, to which all were welcome.

The spelling contest yesterday between the Freshman and eighth grade pupils on one side and seventh grade on the other, was won by the former.

School closed yesterday for a two weeks' holiday vacation.

You are hereby notified that the following pieces or parcels of land, situated in the county of Pennington formerly a part of Red Lake county, state of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, towit: Lots 10, 11, 12, 13 of Block 24 in Knox's addition to Red Lake Rapids in the city of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, is now assessed in your name.

That on the 13th day of May, A. D. 1907, at a sale of land pursuant to the real estate tax judgment duly given and made in and by the District Court in and for said county of Red Lake on the 25th day of March A. D. 1912, in proceedings to enforce the payment of taxes delinquent upon real estate for the year A. D. 1905, for said county of Red Lake, the above described pieces or parcels of land was duly offered for sale, and no one bidding upon said offer an amount equal to that for which said pieces or parcels was subject to be sold, towit: the sum of seven dollars and eighty-four cents, the same was duly bid in for the state of Minnesota for said sum.

That thereafter, and on the 11th day of November, A. D. 1912, the said pieces or parcels of land, not then having been redeemed from said sale, and having then become the absolute property of the state of Minnesota, was sold and conveyed at public sale by the county auditor of said county pursuant to the order and direction of the state auditor of the state of Minnesota, and in accordance with the provisions of the statute in such case made and provided, for the sum of twelve dollars and seventy-seven cents, duly paid to the county treasurer of said county.

That the certificate of sale for said pieces or parcels of land executed and delivered by said county auditor upon said sale last above mentioned has been presented to me at my office by the holder thereof for the purpose of having notice of expiration of time for redemption from said tax sale of said property given and served; and that the amount required to redeem said pieces or parcels of land from said tax sale, at the date of this notice, exclusive of the costs to accrue upon said notice, is the sum of twelve dollars and eighty-one cents.

That the time for the redemption of said piece or parcel of land from said tax sale will expire sixty (60) days after the service of this notice and the filing of proof of such service in my office.

Witness my hand and seal of office this 21st day of November, A. D. 1912.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ninety dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due, and is due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by C. E. Carpenter and Ella A. Carpenter, his wife, and Geo. M. Bleecker and Mary F. Bleecker, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of St. Hilaire, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagees, bearing date the 10th day of June, 1910, and duly acknowledged by said mortgagors on June 25th, 1910, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Red Lake and state of Minnesota on the 30th day of June, 1910, at 5 o'clock p. m., in book 3 of mortgages on page 182.

Which said mortgage was after the organization and creation of Pennington county, Minnesota, duly transcribed into the records in the office of the register of deeds of said Pennington county, and recorded therein on the 23rd day of November, 1910, in book 2 of mortgages on page 332;

And Whereas, The said mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of fifteen hundred ninety and no-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum from the 10th day of June, 1912, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, towit: The south one-half of the southeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section two (2) in township one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-four (44) west of the fifth principal meridian, in Red Lake county, Minnesota, now a part of Pennington county, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington county at the east front door of the courthouse in the city of Thief River Falls in Pennington county in said state on the 30th day of December, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of fifteen hundred ninety dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated Nov. 12, A. D. 1912.

Of Interest to Boys and Girls

Under twenty-one years of age of St. Hilaire and vicinity:

We take pleasure in announcing the fact that the dairy and food department of the state of Minnesota is making plans to conduct a "Junior Dairy association."

It will consist, in reality, of a number of small organizations under the supervision of the state dairy and food department. The duties of the members will be to keep daily records of the dairy cows on their respective farms. It will be unlike all other forms of cow-testing organizations inasmuch as no prizes will be offered for the high yields of any cow or herd, but will be awarded strictly on the merits of the records kept and the essays covering the things learned by the contestant through the keeping of said records. The department intends to get the junior dairymen and -maids on the farm interested in finding out for themselves just what each cow on their farm is producing, and, in order to succeed in their task, has set aside several hundred dollars that will be spent in the purchase of suitable prizes that will be awarded the successful contestants in each of the 216 districts in the state.

The date for the opening of the contest has not been announced as yet but we expect an official notice from the dairy and food commissioner in the near future.

The Red River Valley Dairymen's association will conduct a similar contest, commencing April 1. The same set of records will answer for both contests, so it will not cost any extra labor to enter both. It is also possible that the St. Hilaire Creamery association will offer some prizes to the first, second and third best sets of records and essays kept by the patrons of this creamery. So, you see, there will be more than one prize or set of prizes to go after.

Let us all get together now and pull towards winning all the prizes on the list fer St. Hilaire. Not for the sake of the prize itself but for the sake of knowing for ourselves which cow it pays us to keep and which one is boarding at our expense. The keeping of daily records is a simple matter that any boy or girl twelve years of age can do if shown how. Of course it will take about five or ten minutes per day to do it right, but we can all spare that time if we once get the habit. Let us get it and GET IT RIGHT.

If after we get the blanks or record sheets, anything should look difficult, just take the records with you to the creamery and we shall be glad to give any information that you may need. We want to get you all, if possible, started at keeping daily records of your cows so that you, and we too, will know how to succeed in getting better returns from the creamery per cow per year. That is the only way to find out because, as any doctor will tell you, it is impossible to prescribe medicine for a person unless you know the nature of his disease. So it is with unprofitable dairying, it is impossible to change it into a profitable undertaking unless we know which cow is consuming more food value in dollars and cents than her entire products will bring us at the creamery.

It is nearing the time usually set for the "turning of a new leaf," let us make up our minds that one "leaf" must be turned, that of taking what a cow brings us regardless of whether that is enough to pay for her keep, and let us find out just what each one is bringing us so that we can dispose of the undesirable ones that we may at least keep the profit that the good cows are returning us intact.

We take this occasion to wish you all a joyful Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

Sincerely yours, A. J. HED.

No Piano has ever been more enthusiastically endorsed. The Artistic Case, the Easy, Responsive Action, and above all the deep, sweet, rich Tone, captivates performer and listener. The united verdict is that

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

"She Shall Never Marry a Man of Your Stamp."

SYNOPSIS.

George Percival Algernon Jones, vice-president of the Metropolitan Oriental Rug company of New York, thirsting for romance, is in Cairo on a business trip. Horace Ryanne arrives at the hotel in Cairo with a carefully guarded bundle. Ryanne sells Jones the famous holy Yhiordes rug which he admits having stolen from a pasha at Bagdad. Jones meets Major Callahan and later is introduced to Fortune Chedsoye by a woman to whom he had loaned 150 pounds at Monte Carlo some months previously, and who turns out to be Fortune's mother. Jones takes Mrs. Chedsoye and Fortune to a polo game. Fortune returns to Jones the money borrowed by her mother. Mrs. Chedsoye appears to be engaged in some mysterious enterprise unknown to the daughter. Ryanne interests Jones in the United Romance and Adventure company, a concern which for a price will arrange any kind of an adventure to order. Mrs. Chedsoye, her brother, Major Callahan, Wallace and Ryanne, as the United Romance and Adventure company, plan a risky enterprise involving Jones.

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

"I accept it as such. I am tired of petty things. I repeat, failure is not possible. Have I not thought it out, detail by detail, mapped out each line, anticipated dangers by eliminating them?"

"All but that one danger of which we know nothing. You're a great woman, Kate. You have, as you say, made ninety-nine dangers out of a hundred impossible. Let us keep an eye out for that hundredth. Our photographs have yet to grace the rogues' gallery."

"With one exception." Ryanne's laughter was sardonic.

"Whose?" shot the major.

"Mine. A round and youthful phiz, a silky young mustache. But rest easy; there's no likeness between that and the original one I wear now."

"You never told me . . . " began Mrs. Chedsoye.

"There was never any need till now. Eight years ago. Certain powers that be worked toward my escape. But I was never to return. You will recollect that I have always remained this side. Enough. What I did does not matter. I will say this much: my crime was in being found out. One venture into New York and out to sea again: they will not have a chance. I doubt if any could recall the circumstances of my meteoric career. You will observe that I am keyed for anything. Let us get to work. It doesn't matter, anyhow."

"You did not . . . " Mrs. Chedsoye hesitated.

"Blood?" reading her thought. "No, Gioconda; my hands are guiltless, at least they were till this Bagdad affair; and I am not sure there. I was a trusted clerk; I gambled; I took money that did not belong to me. And here I am, room number 208."

"It doesn't matter. Come, Kate; don't stare at Hoddy as if he were a new species." The major smoothed the ends of his moustache. "This confession will be good for his soul."

"Yes, Gioconda; I feel easier now. I am heart and soul in this affair. I need excitement, too. Lord, yes. When I went to Bagdad, I had no idea that I should ever lay eyes upon that rug. But I did. And there's the emeralds, too, major."

The major rubbed his hands pleasurably. "Yes, yes; the emeralds; I had not forgotten them. One hundred lovely green stones, worth not a penny under thirty thousand. A fine collection. But another idea has taken possession of this teeming brain of mine. Have you noticed how this fellow Jones hovers about Fortune? He's worth a million, if he's worth a cent. I am sure, in pure gratitude, she would see to it that her loved ones were well taken care of in their old age."

"I am going to marry Fortune myself," said Ryanne blandly.

"You?" The major was nonplussed. Wallace shuffled his feet uneasily. This blood companion of his was always showing kinks in his nature, kinks that rarely ever straightened out.

"Yes. And why not? What is she to either you or her mother? Nothing. Affection you have never given her, being unable. It surprises you; but, nevertheless, I love her, and I am going to marry her."

"Really?" said Mrs. Chedsoye.

"Even so."

"You are a fool, Horace!" with rising fury. So then, the child had not jibed her in a moment of pique?

"Men in love generally are fools. I've never spoken before, because you never absolutely needed me till now. There's my cards, pat."

Mrs. Chedsoye's fury deepened, but not visibly. "You are welcome to her, if she will have you."

"Yes," supplemented the major; "if she will have you, my friend, take her, and our benedictions."

Ryanne's shoulders stirred suggestively.

"Of course, I expect to have the final word to say on the subject. She is my daughter," said Mrs. Chedsoye.

"A trifling accident, my dear Gioconda," smiled Ryanne! "merely that."

"Just a little oil, just a little oil," the major pleaded anxiously. "Dash it all, this is no time for a row of this silly order. But it's always the way," irritably. "A big enterprise, demanding a single purpose, and a trifle like this to upset it all!"

"I am ready for business at any moment."

"And you, Kate?"

"We'll say no more about it till the affair is over. After that . . . "

"Those who live will see, eh?" Ryanne rolled a cigarette.

"To business, then. In the first place, Mr. Jones must not reach the Ludwig."

"He will not." Ryanne spoke with quiet assurance.

"He will not even see that boat," added Wallace, glad to hear the sound of his voice again.

"Good. But, mind, no rough work."

"Leave it all to me," said Ryanne. "The United Romance and Adventure Company will give him an adventure on approval, as it were."

"To you, then. The report from New York reads encouragingly. Our friends there are busy. They are merely waiting for us. From now on Percival Algernon must receive no more mail, telegrams or cables."

"I'll take care of that also." Ryanne looked at Mrs. Chedsoye musingly.

"His real estate agent will wire him, possibly tomorrow."

"In that event, he will receive a cable signifying that the transaction is perfectly correct."

"He may also inquire as to what to do with the valuables in the wall-safe."

"He will be instructed to touch nothing, as the people who will occupy the house are old friends." Ryanne smoked calmly.

"Wallace, you will return to New York at once."

"I thought I was wanted here?"

"No longer."

"All right; I'm off. I'll sail on the Prince Ludwig, stateroom 118. I'll have my joke by the way.

"You will do nothing of the kind. You will have a stateroom by yourself," said Mrs. Chedsoye crisply. "And no wine, nor cards. If you fail, I'll break you . . . "

"As we would a churchwarden's pipe, Wallace, my lad." Ryanne gripped his companion by the shoulder, and there was enough pressure in the grip to cause the recipient to wince.

"Well, well; I'll lay a straight course." Wallace slid his shoulder from under Ryanne's hand.

"To you, then, Hoddy, the business of quarantining our friend Percival. Don't hurt him; simply detain him. You must realize the importance of this. Have you your plans?"

"I'll perfect them tomorrow. I shall find a way, never fear."

"Does the rug come in anywhere?" The major was curious. It sometimes seemed to him that Ryanne did not always lay his cards face up upon the table.

"It will play its part. Besides, I am rather inclined to the idea of taking it back. It may be the old wishing-carpet. In that case, it will come in handy. Who knows?"

"How much is it worth?"

"Ah, major, Percival himself could not say exactly. He gave me a thousand pounds for it."

"A thousand pounds!" murmured Wallace.

The major struck his hands lightly together. Whether in applause or wonder he alone knew.

"And it was worth every shilling of it, too. I'll tell you the story some day. There are a dozen ways of suppressing Percival, but I must have something appealing to my artistic side."

"You have never told us your real name, Horace," Mrs. Chedsoye bent toward him.

He laughed. "I must have something to confess to you in the future, dear Gioconda."

"Well, the meeting adjourns, sine die."

"What are you going to do with Fortune?" demanded Ryanne.

"Send her back to Mentone."

"What the deuce did you bring her here for, knowing what was in the wind?"

"She expressed a desire to see Cairo again," answered Mrs. Chedsoye.

"We never deny her anything." The major rose and yawned suggestively.

In the corridor, Ryanne whispered softly: "Why not, Gioconda "

"She shall never marry a man of your stamp," coldly.

"Charming mother! How tenderly you have cherished her!"

"Horace," calmly enough, "is it wise to anger me?"

"It may not be wise, but I have never seen you in a rage. You would be magnificent."

"Cease this foolery," patiently. "I am in no mood for it tonight. As an associate in this equivocal business, you do very well; you are necessary. But do not presume too much upon that. For all that I may not have been what a mother should be, I still have some self-respect. So long as I have any power over her, Fortune shall never marry a man so far down in the social scale as yourself."

"Social scale? Gioconda, how you hurt me!" mockingly. "I should really like to know what your idea of that invincible barrier is. Is it because my face is in the rogues' gallery? Surely, you would not be cruel!"

"She is far above us all, my friend," continuing unruffled. "Sometimes I stand in absolute awe of her."

"A marvel! If my recollection is not at fault, many a man has entered the Villa Fanny, with a view to courtship, men beside whom I am as Roland to the lowest Saracen. You never objected to them."

"They had money and position."

"Magic talisman! And if I had money and position?"

"My objections would be no less strong."

"Your code puzzles me. You would welcome as a son-in-law a man who stole openly the widow's mite, while I, who harass none, but the predatory rich, must dwell in the outland? Rank injustice!"

"You couldn't take care of her."

"Yes, I could. With but little effort I could make these two hands as honest as the day is long."

"I have my doubts," smiling a little.

"Suppose, for the sake of an argument, suppose Fortune accepted me?"

Mrs. Chedsoye's good humor returned. She knew her daughter tolerably well; the child had a horror of men. "Poor Horace! Do you build upon that?"

"Less, perhaps, than upon my own bright invention. My suit, then to be brief, is rejected?"

"Emphatically. I have spoken."

"Oh, well; the feminine prerogative shall be mine, the last word. Good night; dormi bene!" He bowed grandly and turned toward his own room.

He possessed that kind of mockery which was the despair of those at whom it was directed. They never knew whether his mood was one of harmless fun or of deadly intent. And rather than mistake the one quality for the other, they generally pretended to ignore. Mrs. Chedsoye, who had a similar talent, was one of the few who felt along the wall as one does in the dark, instinctively. Tonight she recognized that there was no harmless fun but a real desperateness behind the mask; and she had held in her temper with a firm hand. This was not the hour for a clash. She shivered a little; and for the first time in the six or seven years she had known him, she faced a fear of him. His great strength, his reckless courage, his subtle way of mastering men by appearing to be mastered by them, held her in the thrall of a peculiar fascination which, in quiet periods, she looked upon as something deeper. Marriage was not to her an ideal state, nor was there any man, living or dead, who had appealed to the physical side of her. But he was in the one sex what she was in the other; and while she herself would never have married him, she raged inwardly at the possibility of his wanting another woman.

To her the social fabric which holds humanity together was merely a convenience; the moral significance touched neither her heart nor her mind. In her the primordial craving for ease, for material comforts, pretty trinkets and gowns was strongest developed. It was as if this sense had been handed down to her, untouched by contact with progression, from the remote ages, that time between the fall of Roman civilization and where modern civilization began. In short a beautiful barbarian, whose intellect alone had advanced.

Fortune was asleep. The mother went over to the bed and gently shook the slim, round arm which lay upon the coverlet. The child's nature lay revealed as she opened her eyes and smiled. It did not matter that the smile instantly changed to a frowning inquiry. The mother spoke truly when she said that there were times when she stood in awe of this, her flesh and blood.

"My child, I wish to ask you a question, and for your own good answer truthfully. Do you love Horace?"

Fortune sat up and rubbed her eyes. "No." Had her wits been less scattered she might have paltered.

The syllable had a finality to it that reassured the mother more than a thousand protestations would have done.

"Good night," she said.

Fortune lay down again and drew the coverlet up to her chin. With her eyes shut she waited, but in vain. Her mother disrobed and sought her own bed.

Ryanne was intensely dissatisfied with himself. For once his desperate mood had carried him too far. He had made too many confessions, had antagonized a woman who was every bit as clever and ingenious as himself. The enterprise toward which they were moving held him simply because it was an exploit that enticed wholly his twisted outlook upon life. There was a forbidding humor in the whole affair, too, which he alone saw. The possible rewards were to him of secondary consideration. It was the fun of the thing. It was the fun of the thing that had put him squarely upon the wide, short road to perdition, which had made him first a spendthrift, then a thief. The fun of the thing; sinister phrase! A thousand times had he longed to go back, for he wasn't all bad; but door after door had shut behind him; and now the single purpose was to get to the end of the road by the shortest route.

He did not deceive himself. His desperate mood was the result of an infernal rage against himself, a rage against the weakness of his heart, Fortune Chedsoye. Why had she not crossed his path at that time when he might have been saved? And yet, would she have saved him? God alone knew.

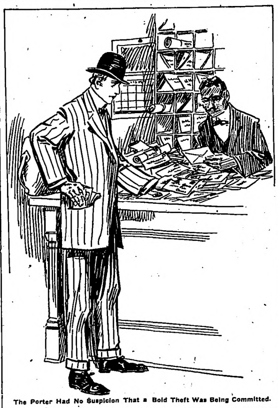
He heard Jones stirring in his room next door. Presently all became still. To sleep like that! He shrugged, threw off his coat, swept the cover from the stand, found a pack of cards, and played solitaire till the first pallor of dawn announced the new day.

Reclining snugly against the parapet, wrapped in his tattered arbiyeth, or cloak, his head pillowed upon his lean arm, motionless with that pretended sleep of the watcher, Mahomed-El-Gebel kept his vigil. Miles upon miles he had come, across three bleak, cold, blinding deserts, on camels, in trains, on camels again, night and day, day and night, across the soundless, yellow plains. Allah was good to the true believer. The night was chill, but certain fires warmed his blood. All day long he had followed the accursed, lying giaour, but never once had he wandered into the native quarters of the city. Patience! What was a day, a week, a year? Grains of sand. He could wait. Inshalla!

CHAPTER VIII.

The Purloined Cable.

George, having made his bargain with conscience relative to the Yhiordes rug, slept the sleep of the untroubled, of the just, of the man who had nothing in particular to get up for. In fact, after having drunk his breakfast cocoa and eaten his buttered toast, he evinced his satisfaction by turning his face away from the attracting morning light and passing off into sleep again. And thereby hangs this tale.



The Porter Had No Suspicion That a Bold Theft Was Being Committed.

So much depended upon his getting his mail as it came in that morning, that Fate herself must have resisted sturdily the desire to shake him by the shoulder. Perhaps she would have done so but for the serenity of his pose and the infantile smile that lingered for a while round his lips. Fate, as with most of us, has her sentimental lapses.

The man next door, having no conscience to speak of (indeed, he had derailed her while passing his twentieth meridian!) was up betimes. He had turned in at four; at six he was strolling about the deserted lounging-room, watching the entrances. It is inconceivable how easily mail may be purloined in a large hotel. There are as many ways as points to the wind. Ryanne chose the simplest. He waited for the mail-bag to be emptied upon the head-porter's counter. Nonchalantly, but deftly, while the porter looked on, the adventurer ran through the bulk. He found three letters and a cable, the latter having been received by George's bankers the day before and mailed directly to the hotel. The porter had no suspicion that a bold theft was being committed under his very eyes. Moreover, circumstances prevented his ever learning of it. Ryanne stuffed the spoils into a pocket.

"If any one asks for me," he said, "say that I shall be at my banker's, the Anglo-Egyptian bank, at 10 o'clock.

"Yes, sir," replied the porter, as he began to sort the rest of the mail, not forgetting to peruse the postals.

Ryanne went out into the street, walking rapidly into town. Mahomed-El-Gebel shook the folds of his cloak and followed. The adventurer did not slacken his gait till he reached Shepheard's hotel. Upon the steps he paused. Some English troops were marching past, on the way to the railway station; the usual number of natives were patrolling the sidewalks, dangling strings of imitation scarabs; a caravan of pack-camels, laden with cotton, shuffled by haughtily; a blind beggar sat on the curb in front, munching a piece of sugar cane. Ryanne, assured that no one he knew was about, proceeded into the writing-room, wholly deserted at this early hour.

He sat down at a desk and opened the cable. It contained exactly what he expected. It was a call for advice in regard to the rental of Mr. George P. A. Jones' mansion in New York and the temporary disposing of the loose valuables. Ryanne read it over a dozen times, with puckered brow, and finally balled it fiercely in his fist. Fool! He could not, at that moment, remember the most essential point in the game, the name and office of the agent to whom he must this very morning send reply. Hurriedly he fished out the letters; one chance in a thousand. He swore, but in relief. In the corner of one of the letters he saw that for some unknown reason the gods were still with him. Reynolds and Reynolds, estates, Broad street; he remembered. He wrote out a reply on a piece of hotel paper, intending to copy it off at the cable-office. This reply covered the ground convincingly. "Renting for two months. Old friends. Leave things as they are. P. A." The initials were a little stroke. From some source Ryanne has picked up the fact that Jones' business correspondence was conducted over those two initials. He tore up the cable into small illegible squares and dropped some into one basket and some into another. Next, he readdressed George's mail to Leipzig; another stroke, meaning a delay of two or three months; from the head office of his banker's there to Paris, Paris to Naples, Naples to New York. That Ryanne did not open these letters was in nowise due to moral suasion; whatever they contained could be of no vital importance to him.

"Now, Horace, we shall bend the crook of our elbow in the bar-room. The reaction warrants a stimulant."

An hour later the whole affair was nicely off his hands. The cable had cost him three sovereigns. But what was that? Niente, rien; nothing; a mere bagatelle. For the first time in weeks a sense of security invaded his being.

It was by now 9 o'clock; and Percival Algernon still reposed upon his bed of ease. Let him sleep. Many days were to pass ere he would again know the comfort of linen sheets, the luxury of down under his ear.

Wants Pictures of Kitchen

Present Day Cooks Like to See Future Working Place Before They Engage Themselves.

"A phase of the servant girl question that was new to me was sprung the other day when I called at an employment agency to hire a cook," said the nervous woman. "A prepossessing looking girl was brought forward for an interview. Her first question was: Have you any pictures of your kitchen?'

"I said I had none.

"'It is always best to bring them,' said the girl loftily. 'It saves time and trouble, for with them to look at a cook can see at a glance the position of the sink, the tubs, the range, and the cupboards, and can tell if the place will suit her.'

"While I was adjusting my mind to that phase of the proposition another woman with a wider experience than mine piped up that she had brought views of her kitchen. From that minute I was out of it as far as that particular cook was concerned. The pictures met her approval, and the other woman hired her on the spot. I asked the manager if it was the custom for housekeepers to produce views of their home when hiring servants.

"'The custom is not yet universal,' he said, 'but it is growing. In one sense the girl is right; it does save time and trouble.'"

Formula for Rapid Firing.

The rifle for rapid firing should have shotgun weight, shotgun balance, shotgun trigger pull, shotgun fit and the sights must be such as can be caught instantly without effort in alignment. The hands grasp the piece firmly, not with the rifleman's loose grip, but the left arm pushes forward while the right draws back, and the trigger is pulled by transferring the drawing back force to the trigger finger, and not by any conscious crooking of that finger. The moment the bead covers the mark the bullet must be under way, be the aim good or bad.—Outing.

Towns Without Taxes.

It was recently reported from Germany that there was a little town within the empire in which there were no taxes. The town possessed benefactions, the revenues from which enabled it to pay its way without the intervention of the tax gatherer.

France never likes to be outdone by anything German, so a Paris contemporary has set itself the task of finding a parallel. Something more than a parallel has been discovered, for not only are there no taxes, but the timbers on the communal lands are sufficient to grant each person a small annuity. This happy land is Montmarlon, in the Midi. There are seven electors in the hamlet, so to avoid anything like rivalry the seven return themselves to the local council.

Cutting down the trees and selling them is sufficient to provide a livelihood for these simple people, whose tastes are so modest that they may be termed by some uncivilized.

Long Record as Public Singer.

What is probably the world's record as a public singer is held by Mrs. George V. Johnson, who for more than 62 years has ben soloist in the Presbyterian church. She has traveled a distance of more than 40,000 miles in merely going to and from her choir rehearsals and church services, while the actual time she has spent in a choir seat would amount to the equivalent of one year and a half.—Pike (N. Y.) Gazette.

The Open Book.

The life which is an open book reminds us chiefly that an open book is not a handy thing to carry around.—Puck.

HE KNEW WHAT TO AVOID

If Knowing uman Nature Would Do It This Man Would Have Made Good Preacher.

"Dr. John Haynes Holmes, who preached a Bull Moose sermon to President Taft the Sunday before election day, isn't like Washington White," said a member of Dr. Holmes' Church of the Messiah in New York.

"Washington White was an aged hod carrier. Laying down his paper one evening, he said to his wife over his spectacles:

"'Martha, I believe I'd make a preacher. Listen, now, and I'll give you a sermon.'

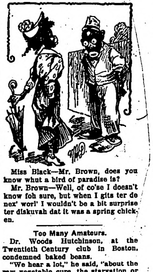
"The old man then stood up to the table and bellowed out a vigorous discourse on the wickedness of the idolators of the Orient.

"His wife said at the end:

"'A good enough sermon, Washington, but you've told us all about the sins of the foreigners and never a word about the sins of the folks at home here.'

"'Ha, ha, ha, I understand preachin' too well for that,' laughed the wily old man."

BLISSFUL SUPPOSITION.



Miss Black—Mr. Brown, does you know whut a bird of paradise is?

Mr. Brown—Well, of co'se I doesn't know foh sure, but when I gits ter de nex' worl' I wouldn't be a bit surprise ter diskuvah dat it was a spring chicken.

Too Many Amateurs.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson, at the Twentieth Century club in Boston, condemned baked beans.

"We hear a lot," he said, "about the raw vegetable cure, the starvation or fast cure, the fruit cure and what-not. These things, no less than baked beans, are bad for us unless they are recommended by an experienced dietician.

"There are too many amateur dieticians—and we all know the amateur.

"An amateur photographer was showing me some snapshots of Italy.

"'And these leaning buildings, what are they?' I asked.

"'They are some buildings in Pisa,' he replied. 'That perfectly straight one near them is the famous leaning tower.'"

Hopeless.

"Who wrote that story about Roosevelt's return to the Outlook office?" asked the managing editor.

"Billy Pennington," replied the city editor. "I thought it was a pretty good story."

"It was more than that. It was a remarkable story. I think we ought to raise Pennington's salary. He didn't wind up by saying: 'The colonel then plunged into a mass of correspondence.'"

"I'm sorry to have to tell you that he did. I blue-penciled that part of it."

"Oh, pshaw! We'll never be able to make anything of that fellow."

THE AMERICAN RUSH TO WESTERN CANADA IS INCREASING

160 ACRE
FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA
FREE

Free Homesteads
In the new Districts of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta there are thousands of Free Homesteads left, which to the man making entry in 3 years time will be worth from $20 to $25 per acre. These lands are well adapted to grain growing and cattle raising.

EXCELLENT RAILWAY FACILITIES
In many cases the railways in Canada have been built in advance of settlement, and in a short time there will not be a settler who need be more than ten or twelve miles from a line of railway. Railway Rates are regulated by Government Commission.

Social Conditions
The American Settler is at home in Western Canada. He is not a stranger in a strange land, having nearly a million of his own people already settled there. If you desire to know why the condition of the Canadian Settler is prosperous write and send for literature, rates, etc., to

FARM AND ROAD IMPROVEMENT

DAKOTA TYPE OF ROAD DRAG

Different From Others and Is Improvement Because Dirt Cannot Accumulate Underneath.

Mr. J. E. Millett of Hudson, S. D., sends us a sketch of a road drag which he uses which is a little different from any others we have seen described, and we think it an improvement, says the Dakota Farmer. We think it is an improvement because there is nothing between the two planks to gather the dirt under the drag. He takes two pieces of bridge-plank each 8 feet long and three pieces of 2x8 4 feet long to make the drag. The bridge-plank are stood on edge 3 feet 6 inches apart and the three pieces of 2x8 4 feet long are spiked on the top with very heavy spikes. This allows the cross pieces to extend 6 inches back of the back plank of the scraper. Iron braces are then extended from the bottom of these upper planks to near the bottom of the scraper planks. These braces should be good and heavy and may be made out of an old wagon tire or any old material of that kind. A piece of wagon tire or something of that character is then bolted onto the bottom of the scraper to do the cutting. A chain with large links is attached as shown in the cut to which the horses are hitched with clevis and ring. By the use of the chain the angle at which the grader will run can be easily changed by moving the clevis one way or the other and attaching it through a link of the chain. We think probably this is an improvement on the present types of drags as it leaves everything clear underneath, but would suggest that possibly the cross-pieces should extend more than 6 inches back of the rear drag.

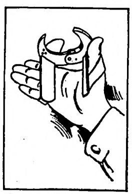
RAPIDITY IN HUSKING CORN

Michigan Man Invents Device That Does Work Almost as Quickly as Ears Are Picked Up.

It would be amusing if a man could attend an old-fashioned country husking bee with one of these corn husking devices and keep it hidden. He would so far outstrip all the other huskers that they would wonder how many hands he had. A Michigan man invented this device, which consists of a pair of pivotally connected curved jaws, a handle carried by each jaw, and strips on each handle by means of which they may be fastened to the hand. The interior of the jaws are serrated, so that when they are gripped over the husk of an ear of corn they take hold of it and strip it off in a twinkling, rolling the entire husk back at once. One motion is all that is required, and with a little practice a man can husk corn with this device as fast as he can pick the ears up.



Corn Husker.

Use of Spreader Best.

The piling of manure in small lots as it is hauled afield may have some points in its favor, but from the standpoint of realizing the largest possible good from the fertilizing elements contained is plainly a poorer method than scattering from the spreader.

Handled in this way, the soluble portion of the fertilizers that the manure contains soaks at once into the soil, while if the manure is put in piles there is a loss by chemical changes and the escape of gases.

Value of Windbreaks.

Windbreaks are popular. They make the farmstead look better and they make the buildings and yards more comfortable for the people and the stock.

GOOD ROAD BUILDING RULES

Deputy Commissioner of Michigan Gives Several Excellent Hints for Constructing Highways.

(By FRANK F. ROGERS, Deputy Highway Commissioner of Michigan.)

Never drag a dry road.

When dragging let the team straddle the wheel track.

It is absolutely necessary to use tile drains where roads cross springy soils.

A rise of six feet in each hundred feet of length is the required grade for state reward roads.

Loose sandy roads should be nearly level, with very shallow gutters to remove the water when the ground is frozen.

The cost for regrading old roads to fit them for the state reward restrictions has been between $200 and $400 per mile.

Where tile drains are not needed the bottom of the open drains should usually be at least two feet below the crown of the road.

No roads can be made good until the hills have been graded down to reasonable inclines and the road beds suitably shaped for travel.

Frequent scraping of sand roads with the road-scraper, or other scraping tools, is not only a loss of time and money, but a positive injury. Turnpiking up the sand simply helps the wheels to cut into it that much deeper.

Directions for making the plank road float may be obtained by writing to the state highway department at Lansing, Mich. This float is recognized to be the most useful road tool in existence. It can be built for about $3.

The time to use the float drag is, (1) In the spring when the frost has left the ground and the road begins to dry, but while yet muddy. (2) Immediately after very prolonged rain any time throughout the season. (3) In the fall just before the ground freezes. (4) In winter if frost should happen to leave the ground.

Gravel roads are popular in Michigan:

(1) Because they are durable and satisfactory.

(2) Because they are easily built and easily repaired, requiring no expensive machinery.

(3) Because the first cost is low.

(4) Because they draw a relatively large state reward, frequently one-third or more of their cost.

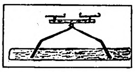
(5) Because they are a labor proposition from start to finish and keep all the money spent in their construction at home.

If you have gravel, build a gravel road.

HANDY FOR BREAKING STALKS

Implement for Use During Winter Months Is Simple and Any Blacksmith Can Make One.

For breaking stalks in winter, a tool is very simple and easily made. The plank is about 3x8 inches, and long enough to break five rows. The manner of hitching, says the Practical Farmer, is also easy, and any blacksmith will soon make it.



Handy Stalk Drag.

Bolt the rods to the plank about four feet from the ends, to prevent plank from jumping. On lower front edge of plank nail an old wagon tire, with worn side of tire next to plank, with sharp cutting edge down. Use when stalks are frozen.

Stable Manure Lacks Phosphorus.

On account of the relatively high percentage of nitrogen and potash in stable manure it is wise to add phosphoric acid to it in order that it may be a more nearly balanced fertilizer.

It is a good practice to use acid phosphate in the gutters of the stable, as this will absorb the odors and may fix any ammonia that is present. It has not been shown, however, that mixing the fertilizer with manure affords any other advantage over applying it separately.

Potatoes for Seed.

The heaviest yielding hills of potatoes are not always the best for seed. The number of plants in the hill must be taken into consideration.

Make Silos Deep.

You should always have your silos made deep so the silage will pack good.

Good Roads & Farm Notes

Buy your clover seed early.

Good roads cost money, but they are worth it.

It's a wise farmer that knows his own seed corn.

Shooting quail ought to be made a penitentiary offense.

Deep-plowed land has a great capacity for storage of moisture.

A heavy crop of weeds will check the growth of the clover a great deal.

A clover sod turned down makes an excellent foundation for a corn crop.

The ground for sweet clover seed should be prepared the same as fo. alfalfa or clover.

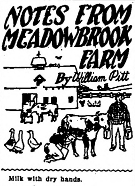
Hay stacked in the open loses 20 per cent. of its value by spoiling on the sides and bottom.

It does not pay to devote high-priced land for long periods to pasturage and the production of hay.

Rotation allows or assists nature to repair her waste places and incidentally facilitate the war on weeds.

Fall plowing of field areas will often be of service in controlling cut worms that are affecting field crops.

The silo means excellent feed stored in small space. Just what is needed when the grass in the pasture is dry.



NOTES FROM MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Milk with dry hands.

Turkeys kill many insects.

Dampness is bad for poultry.

Shelter for animals is humane.

Swine must have warm sleeping quarters.

Damp houses are the greatest promoters of disease among fowls.

The average cow is at her best as a producer at from 5 to 8 years old.

Unless wisely fed and cared for, a herd of fine hogs will degenerate rapidly.

The difficulty in ensiling rape is that there is too large a percentage of moisture.

The average calf is a badly neglected animal, especially during the fall and winter months.

The dairy cows, especially, will greatly relish and do well on the odd turnips, beets and cabbage.

For good churning qualities and uniform grade of butter, avoid mixing cream or different skimmings.

It is expensive carelessness to hitch a warm horse inadequately protected from raw winds or a drizzling rain.

Shelter for animals is not only humane but it shows up in the feed bins or in the bony animals in the spring.

There has not been a better time in years to take hold of the chicken business in a vigorous way than right now.

The growing pig requires protein and not much corn. It is all right to give a little corn, but too much is harmful.

Are your curry combs and brushes in good condition? You just can't afford to use poor ones. New ones cost but little.

Neither rape nor clover alone will do for growing, fattening hogs. They must have some grain twice a day for best results.

Feed green corn or any soiling crop that will keep up the flow of milk until the pastures have been revived by the fall rains.

Hogs by nature like a good clean bed to lie in. They will do all the better for it, because they will be more comfortable.

A cough in a hog can usually be traced to one of three things: Dust, worms or cold, but there is no telling what it may result in.

By actual experiment, it has been found that by feeding alfalfa hay with corn the cost of fattening pigs has been decreased about one-half.

A very good way to raise dairy calves is to feed them whole milk from two to four weeks, depending upon the physical condition of the calf.

Great care should be exercised that breeding stock, young chicks, or eggs for hatching be secured from flocks which are free from white diarrhea infection.

Where only a small flock of sheep is kept they should be good, thrifty, vigorous ewes. Sell off the old ones and keep lambs enough to keep up the flock.

Air-slacked lime sifted or scattered over the dropping boards will assist the cleaning process materially and also take up much of the dampness from the droppings.

In buying cows for the dairy it is usually best to buy those with their second or third calf. A good plan, too, if possible, is to test for butter fat. Always test for tuberculosis.

When you have found for a certainty that a hen is unprofitable dispose of her at once. Some hens are never good layers but they eat as much as the best of the flock.

The profit of a pure-bred herd of cows depends very largely upon the keeper. Some men will make more with ordinary stock than others will make with the very best of breeding.

With dairy products at a high figure, feed of all kinds plentiful, and the chances even for a mild winter, it looks as though the man with cows to milk this winter is due to make some money.

If chickens for exhibition purposes could have as much time in coops before the show as they have during the show, they would pose better for the judge, and be in quite as good condition with right feeding.

When a stop is made, turn the horses toward the wind, if possible, so that they may cool off. When they are resting, take the load off their necks, if possible. Give them a chance to rool and scratch themselves when they are unharnessed at night. They should be given a good bed and plenty to eat at night, and they should be watered in the morning before they are fed.

Fowls must have grit.

Barley is hard to digest.

Rape is too moist for siling.

Clover likes black, sandy loam.

The "right side" of a cow should be both sides.

Don't send any of the lambs to market in thin condition.

The sheep barn should be put in shape for the winter.

The cow barn is a poor place to install the cream separator.

Boards are cheaper than hay and grain for keeping stock warm.

It may be set down as a rule that it does not pay to fatten old cows.

A silo 18 feet in diameter and 40 feet high will hold 200 tons of silage.

It is not an easy task to break a cow from the habit of sucking herself.

Farmers at the present time can own no better stock than healthy growing pigs.

No animal that gets only food enough to support life can make a gain or profit.

Any man who will strike a horse in the head should never be allowed to touch one again.

Treat a calf mean and all the feed you give him never can make anything but a runt of him.

Poultry netting tacked on the inside of windows in the hen house will save the cost of many a glass.

Well bred stock and good feeding are requisite to obtaining the greatest benefit in stock raising.

Pneumonia kills many pigs before they get used to sleeping in damp pens, drafts or snow banks.

A solid concrete foundation for the separator insures it against vibration, which is hard on the machine.

Don't forget that if the sheep are not kept constantly in good condition the quality of the wool is affected.

Silage may be fed to young stock twice a day and it is a very good feed for all kinds of young dairy animals.

Remember the limited capacity of the hog's digestive apparatus and form his concentrated rations accordingly.

It is claimed by those who have tried it, that a cross of Moscovy drake on Pekin ducks will produce sterile progeny.

A ewe in good flesh almost invariably is a good breeder and a good suckler, something that thin ewes cannot very well do.

Bruises, cuts and small sores may develop into serious wounds, if not properly looked after and protected from the flies.

In purchasing a boar it is well to bear in mind that one with heavy bones is more to be desired than one of the slight build.

Regular careful milking permanently improves the animal as a milk producer, aside from directly increasing the milk flow.

One way of keeping dirt, flies, etc., from dropping into the pail while milking is to cover the pail with clean cheesecloth and milk through it.

The small farmer can keep a variety of live stock sufficient to produce something to sell and bring in a bit of ready cash every month in the year.

Did you know that you can get the confidence of the horse? He is often a better judge of human nature than many a man is of horse nature.

Build the silo next to the cattle barn where the feed can be taken right from the silo into the barn. A feed carrier makes light work in such a case.

Charcoal and grit should be kept where the fowls can have access to them at all times. They are a preventative as well as a cure for indigestion.

Dampness and contaminated ground are fruitful causes of poultry diseases. The quarters should be as dry as a chip, and the ground in the runs perfectly pure.

When a sick fowl is discovered, remove it at once. Maybe if you will attend to it then and there you can save it, whereas if allowed to wait too long it may die.

Do you know that feeding rye straw to pregnant ewes is a bad practice? The straw contains a considerable amount of ergot, which is likely to produce abortion.

The duck laying season opens in February, although a number of early hatched ducklings begin laying in January. The first eggs of the season are rarely ever fertile.

Select your breed for the special purpose it is to be kept for. If there is no definite purpose, study the matter over carefully till it is known what kind of poultry will net the best returns.

Do not buy a cow just because you can get her at what seems to be a low price. A poor cow is expensive at any price. If a cow can't produce enough to pay for a dollar's worth of feed she isn't worth having. You needn't be afraid of paying too much for a cow that produces from 250 to 350 or 400 pounds of butter fat a year. The trouble is such cows are not usually for sale, or if you want that kind you must raise them.

SALONIKI IN PAUL'S DAY

Turkish City That Has Had More Than 2,500 Years of Continuous History.

Saloniki.—The city we now call Saloniki has had a continuous history for more than 2,500 years, says a writer in the Christian Herald. Even before it was refounded and renamed by Alexander the Great, in the year 315 B. C., a city had existed on this beautiful gulf, facing mighty Mount Olympus. But its known history dates from this year, when Alexander rebuilt it and called it Thessalonica, after his sister, the wife of Cassander. It is said that Philip of Macedon named his daughter Thessalonica because on the day he heard of her birth he won a victory over the Thessalians. Thus the victory of Philip and the name of his daughter, the half-sister of the conqueror of the world, are all embalmed in the name of the city.

Ruins of Palace in Saloniki.

A great city with its harbor full of shipping, its white houses rising in tiers one above another from the edge of the water to the summit of the acropolis behind the city, and around all a white wall five miles in extent. Through the heart of the city stretched forth the great artery of trade, the Egnation way. At the eastern end it passed under a magnificent marble arch, which was built in honor of the victory of Octavius and Antony over Brutus and Cassius in the battle that took place on the plains of Philippi.

Fortunately for Thessalonica she had sided with the monarchists against the republicans in this battle, and when it was over both Antony and Caesar visited the city and commemorated their triumph by erecting the Arch of Victory, which remains to this day. Under this archway doubtless Paul and Silas passed many times during their somewhat lengthy stay in the city.

It has been my privilege more than once to visit Saloniki, to enter it from the sea as one journeys from Athens, and to leave by the route by which Paul entered it on his first visit. It is interesting to note the characteristics of the city, which are the same now as in Paul's time, as well as the changes which the centuries have wrought.

YOUNG HEAVIER AND TALLER

Washington Health Officer Lays the Fact to Open-Air Schools—Death Rate Is Lower.

Washington.—Heavier and taller children were the net results of the open-air schools of the District of Columbia, according to Health Officer William C. Woodward, who presented his anual report. Dr. Woodward dwelt at length on the advantages of pure air instruction over that given in the classroom and then, without any apparent attempt to criticise, declared that the United States government in its maintenance of its personally owned "fish and oyster wharf" here was maintaining "the most insanitary establishment in the District of Columbia for the preparation of food for sale."

The death rate, despite this, was falling so rapidly, according to Dr. Woodward, that the District soon would become one of the most healthful places in the country.

HAS BIGGEST SEISMOGRAPH

United States Installs a Delicately Adjusted Instrument at New York Museum.

New York.—The largest and most delicately adjusted seismograph in the United States has just been installed in the museum of natural history here. The instrument was made in Germany and presented to the New York Academy of Science by its president, Emerson McMillan. The needle is so sensitive that blasting operations in some parts of New York city have affected it in marked fashion, while one interesting series of undulations is believed to have been caused by sea waves striking on the rocky coast of Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

Even a heavy windstorm sometimes produces a slight variation in the needle's course.

INDIAN GIVEN $500 REWARD

Seneca Larke, Only Aboriginal American in New York Department, Equitable Blaze Hero.

New York.—Seneca Larke, the only aboriginal American in the New York fire department, received a present of $500 in gold in recognition of his heroism at the Equitable fire last January, when he sawed through three inches of steel to rescue William Giblin, president of the Mercantile Safe Deposit company. Larke's reward comes from the bankers' police and firemen's fund raised shortly after the fire. Larke, a descendant of the Seneca tribe of Indians, is an expert engineer and is attached to one of the high-pressure hose companies.

MADE A DEMAND FOR ROSES

Florist's Business Materially Increased Through Action of Enterprising Young Lady.

Many months had passed since first he met the sweet, sweet girl. He loved her dearly, but he was woefully shy, and his suit made but slow progress.

Finally, it was the girl who decided to improve the shining hour, and add a trifle to the pace of the proceedings. To make up her mind was to act, and the very next time the young man called she pointed to the rose that adorned his button hole.

"I'll give you a kiss for that rose," she blurted out.

A crimson, guilty flush overspread the young man's face, like the light of the setting sun. There was, however, no hesitation on his part, and he clinched the bargain. Then he grabbed his cap and proceeded to rush from the room in double quick time.

"And where are you going?" she asked in great surprise.

"Oh," he answered tremulously, "I'm just off to the florist's to buy up his stock of roses!"—London Answers.

ITCHING AND BURNING

Iberia, Mo.—"I was troubled with scalp eczema for about five years and tried everything I heard of, but all of no avail. The doctors told me I would have to have my head shaved. Being a woman, I hated the idea of that. I was told by a friend that the Cuticura Remedies would do me good. This spring I purchased two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap. After using one box of Cuticura Ointment I considered the cure permanent, but continued to use it to make sure and used about one-half the other box. Now I am entirely well. I also used the Cuticura Soap.

"The disease began on the back of my head, taking the form of a ringworm, only more severe, rising to a thick, rough scale that would come off when soaked with oil or warm water, bringing a few hairs each time, but in a few days would form again, larger each time, and spreading until the entire back of the head was covered with the scale. This was accompanied by a terrible itching and burning sensation. Now my head is completely well and my hair growing nicely." (Signed) Mrs. Geo. F. Clark, Mar. 25, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston." Adv.

Too Cold for Baths.

Dr. Xene Y. Smith, a medical inspector in the Muncie (Ind.) public schools, tells this story of his experiences in examining pupils.

"When were you bathed?" asked Dr. Smith of a boy of seven or eight years in a suburban school.

"Bathed?" queried the child. "Why, don't you know this is winter?"

Feared Nebraska May Succeed Texas as Hoodoo

I'LL FIX YOU!
HOODOO

WASHINGTON.—"Naval officers are guessing whether the United State battleship Nebraska, which ran upon an uncharted shoal a short time ago, is going to take the place of the ill-fated Texas, later named San Marcos, which was the hoodoo ship of the navy," remarked Captain L. L. Darbey, a retired naval officer, the other day. "Ill luck pursued the Texas almost from the beginning, and it seemed that it was never out of trouble during all the time it was in commission, except at the battle of Santiago, where it did great work.

"Before the Spanish-American war the Texas while being overhauled at the Brooklyn navy yard was sunk, because the yokes of its sea cocks were broken in the course of repairs, and the water poured in just as if the boat had been scuttled. The Texas sank, as everybody knows, and was raised as soon as possible. It was on that occasion that Captain Jack Phillips, one of the bravest and best naval officers, by the way, that ever trod a bridge, had some fun with Fighting Bob Evans, at that time commanding the Iowa. When the Texas was raised it was found that in the hull were thousands of eels that had been sucked through the open sea cocks. Knowing Captain Evans's fondness for eels Phillips had a lot of them sent over to the Iowa. He was somewhat surprised a day later to receive a note of acknowledgment from his brother officer, which read: 'The eels were fine, Jack; sink her again.'

"It was Jack Phillips, you may remember, who, after the great naval battle of Santiago, when the Spanish battleships were lying on the shores of Cuba smoking from the shot of the American ships, solemnly said to his men: 'Don't cheer, boys; the poor devils are dying.'

"Jack Phillips was one of the bravest, and at the same time most religious, naval officers I ever knew. He was the direct opposite of Bob Evans, but the two were great friends. The Texas, you know, was afterward named the San Marcos, and was the target for gun practice a few months ago. It was a fitting end for a good old ship that had always been in hard luck, except at the time when it was most needed. I say, I wonder if the Nebraska is going to take the place of the Texas as the hoodoo ship of the navy?"

Enterprising Sam Conserves the Natural Resources

IF Sam Lee should put a big gilt sign bearing the words, "Electrical Chinese Laundry," on the front of his little shop, at 3108 Fourteenth street, Northwest, any time in the near future, his customers in Mount Pleasant would not be at all surprised.

In fact, a number of those who intrust their negilge to the tender ministrations of the affable Celestial have been wondering for some time why Sam has neglected such a splendid opportunity for a bit of advertising.

But although Sam has been rejuvenated to the extent where he realizes that electrical power is much stronger, cheaper, and more efficient in the long run than the muscles and sinews of the human arms and back, he has not awakened to the wonders of the "ads."

Sam is a typical specimen of the "new" Chinaman—the product of that stirring spirit which caused the ancient empire to become transformed into a republic in a remarkably short period, and with the loss of only a few hundred heads and other incidentals.

Sam is wide-awake and alert, and in the "Melican slang" he is "on the job." Therefore, when an enterprising salesman revealed the wonders of a new and ingenious device for ironing clothes at the cost of but little perspiration, less physical energy, practically no mental waste, and only a few cents a day in the cost of power, Sam said: "I buy him."

Now Sam irons with an electrical iron which saves him so many hundreds of steps a day between the stove and his ironing table. Further, the iron is so arranged that by pulling a string he releases a weight which bears down on the top of the iron and relieves him of that duty. Better still, the pulling of another string lifts the iron just the right height above the board and Sam does not have to lift it and put it on the old-fashioned iron holder.

He Wants a Wife, and Wants Her Double-Quick

AUGUUST SEYMORE, otherwise known as August Schaefelsky de Hiukkadel de Castellane, one time dentist to the bey of Tunis and his harem, wants a wife, and wants her double-quick. He has from now until January 1 to persuade an American girl to marry him, or he will forfeit a legacy of $150,000 promised by a California woman.

An aunt, formerly of Oakland, Cal., told him five years ago that if he would earn "something worth while and capture an American for a wife," she would give him $150,000.

Seymore is a relative of the Castellane family made famous by the marital difficulties of Count Boni.

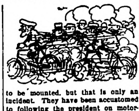
He is now in Washington, where he expects to remain until he finds "the woman" that his aunt told him he must have before he is entitled to her money. He has lectured, written, practiced dentistry and served in the French army. In a wife he would have a chum.

"I used to believe in my mother's view of marriage—the marriage of the eye—but I have come to the view of the marriage of reason," said Seymore. "Mother said that marriage progressed from the stage of catching, or buying, a woman to the wooing of a woman regarded in a nobler sense, and the winning of the wife.

"Now I feel that the marriage of the eye is the result of the sentimentality of youth and immaturity. Better is that marriage where the couple are partners, chums, sharing everything alike. I don't believe in the marriage where the man has the money and forces his wife to ask him for every cent she gets.

"Rather, there should be a balance of power, so that the man and the woman are on an absolutely equal footing as regards money, morals, pleasures and sorrows."

In Doubt as to Mr. Wilson's Mode of Locomotion



JUST at present Washington is wondering whether it will soon behold a president of the United States rolling leisurely by on his bicycle. It has just come out that the president-elect is fond of that manner of locomotion. He has gone on his vacation, and proposes to spend a part of it riding on his wheel. He has pedaled over many miles of English and continental roads in this fashion and likes it. Time was when Washington was filled with eminent men and women awheel, but they have all vanished save one, Assistant Secretary of State A. A. Adee. He is the permanent assistant secretary of state, a man who sticks to his own notions about things. Every summer he voyages to Europe and spends a month or so bicycling to places of interest. He and the new president should establish cordial relations very early.

If as president Gov. Wilson wants to "bike" around Washington, he will not want for good roads. They stretch in every direction, except toward Virginia. The secret service men who guard him, of course, would also have to be mounted, but that is only an incident. They have been accustomed to following the president on motorcycles and sometimes in an automobile of their own. If the new president takes to bicycling, however, official Washington will do likewise. That is a way official Washington has. If Gov. Wilson goes out much awheel, it will not be long before embassadors and ministers and secretaries and military attaches will also be pedaling along the sleeky-oiled roads and dodging automobiles. Cabinet officials and congressmen will do likewise. The revival of bicycling among the well-to-do may be expected somewhat all over the country.

Sizing Him Up.

When you call the average young man honest he is likely to feel a mild sort of gratification. When you call him competent his chest begins to bulge. When you call him a heartbreaker he slaps you on the shoulder and gives you to understand that he considers you a person of remarkable perception and unerring judgment.

Daily Thought.

A man should never be ashamed to own he has been in the wrong, which is but saying, in other words, that he is wiser today than he was yesterday.—Pope.

Reason for Superiority.

The demestication of animals and the utilization of plants does not go very far except under a civilized people. Contrast the age of Peru and Mexico with that of Egypt, Babylonia and China; and one reason for old-world superiority in the mastery of nature is plain.

A La Mode.

"What was the chief food of the woodchoppers in whose camp you spent your vacation?" "Pork and potatoes, served in the form of chops and chips."—Christian Science Monitor.

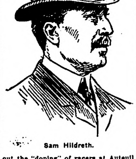
DISQUALIFY A DOPED HORSE

Mare Trained by Sam Hildreth Is Set Back by French Racing Stewards —Charge Denied.

Sporting circles are agitated over the action of the stewards of Auteuil in disqualifying Camyre, a mare owned by Charles Kohler and trained by Sam Hildreth, after she won the Prix de la Vallee. The authorities based their disqualification on a charge that Camyre had been drugged, and declared that traces of stimulants were found in the horse's saliva.

Similar action has been taken by the stewards in the cases of several other horses, and the authorities have announced their determination to stamp out the "doping" of racers at Auteuil. Complaints against the practice have been unusually numerous this year.



Sam Hildreth.

M. Monbel, one of the Frenchmen who incurred the penalty of disqualification, has declared his intention of taking the matter to the courts.

When Hildreth was asked what he thought of the stewards' verdict, he answered:

"Camyre was in normal condition when she won the race."

When he was asked what he intends to do in the matter he was as noncommittal as before, contenting himself with saying:

"What can be done against the decision of the stewards? Nothing at all."

1912 BIG YEAR IN BASEBALL

9,287 Players Participated in 47 Leagues of National Association, Says Farrell.

The report of Secretary John H. Farrell for the past year, presented at the annual meeting of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues in Milwaukee, shows that the present association comprises 47 leagues, embracing 322 towns and cities of the United States and Canada.

The report says 9,287 players' contracts were promulgated; 1,729 "terms accepted" were examined and promulgated; 3,168 players were reported released by purchase between national association clubs; 133 optional agreements were approved; 105 optional agreements were exercised; 3,425 players were reported for release; 948 players were reported for suspension; 325 players were reinstated; one player was declared ineligible; 239 players were selected by draft.

The national board of arbitration passed upon 936 disputed cases during the year and handed down decisions for the same, and 132 cases are on hand for disposal at the annual meeting now in progress.

The National league drafted 30 players, and the American league drafted 38. The National association drafted 141 players.

Total amount received through this office for drafted players, including money refunded on National association drafts disallowed:

National league, $43,040; American league, $60,100; National association, $70,950; total draft money, $174,450; amount paid on optional agreements, $73,250. Amount paid for release by purchase of National association players, $133,000. Grand total, $380,700.

McGinnity Buys Club.

Joe McGinnity is now a full-fledged club owner once more. He has purchased the majority of the stock in the Tacoma club of the Northwestern league. McGinnity will act as manager and also take his turn in the box.

Tribute to Brush.

President Comiskey of the White Six says baseball will feel the loss of John T. Brush. "He was a power in the game," said Commy, "and the American league will miss him as much as the National."

Carlo's Great Record.

Anthony Carlo, the Browns' new southpaw, during the 1912 season won 38 of the 42 games that he pitched. Six of his games were no-run-no-hit affairs. He also hurled 24 shut-outs.

BARBER CUTS OUT FOOTBALL

Innocently Tried to Throw Ball Back to Players When Twenty-One of Them Fell on Him.

Football, with or without the forward pass, will no longer be on the list of favorite sports of Herman Stoeble, of 6,950 Third avenue, Brooklyn. The Oriole and a team of aspiring Bay Ridgers were scheduled to wipe the earth with each other Sunday afternoon in a lot at 79th street and First avenue, in Brooklyn. Stoeble, being a barber, went out to see the long-haired athletes in action. The teams were well matched, the score was close and, as each side had its adherents, there was much excitement among the spectators.

Suddenly from the struggling line a player darted with the ball under his arm. He got free from tacklers and started up the field for a touchdown. The crowd urged him on and the pursuers pressed him. A principle of the game is to hold on to the ball, but this runner dropped it and it fell in front of Stoeble. Now, Stoeble was posted on the price of a face massage and knew how to strop a razor, but the rules of football, especially when the coveted ball is lying at one's feet, were things foreign to his daily round of reading.

However, he felt that he must act quickly, so he grabbed the pigskin and started to throw it out to the runner who had dropped it: Started to throw it, the referee says, is correct. When 21 players uncoiled and unwound themselves and uncovered Stoeble he had the ball still, but he wasn't saying anything.

Dr. Dugan, who hadn't expected to see the game, took Stoeble to the Norwegian hospital and found that the volunteer has a broken leg. He may have internal injuries, too, but it is believed he will recover.

NOTES of SPORTDOM

Stagg as usual stood the endurance test.

The Cincinnati papers are complaining that the Reds do not bat heavy enough.

Sixteen players have been killed on the gridion this year against fourteen last year.

It's getting so a man has to win a pennant or get a new job. Especially in the big leagues.

Pitcher Carl Cashion of the Washington Senators says he is learning a new throw to first.

Jimmy O'Rourke and Charles Hemphill of Columbus have been sold to Bill Friel of St. Paul.

Ty Cobb has batted better than .300 in all the seven years that he has spent in fast company.

The New York Giants copped 319 bases last season, against 248 for Cincinnati, the next highest.

Jimmy Burke has been mentioned as a possibility to manage the Grand Rapids team next season.

Walter Johnson and Henry, says Clark Griffith, are the greatest battery that ever went into a ball game.

Yale thought she could knock the "Brick" out of Brickley, but Harvard took the "Pump" out of Pumpelly.

Captain Larry Doyle of the Giants has been engaged to coach the Seton Hall baseball team of New Jersey.

National league fans in Boston are looking to George Stallings to give them their first good ball club since 1901.

McGraw would like to know who put the "grass" in Snodgrass, and who is responsible for the "merk" in Merkle.

Heinie Zimmerman, according to the figures, leads the National league with the war club, closely followed by an Indian.

Outfielder Connoly, who was caught in the draft by the Washington Senators from Montreal, batted for .316 last season.

Bat Nelson's manager contends the Hegewisch man is in the prime of life. "Dr." Phelon and "Doc" Osler to the contrary.

Nobody has any sympathy for Miller Huggins since he accepted a job as Cardinal manager. They say it was his own fault.

Jack Ryder says the Athletics and the Red Sox will be contenders in the east, and the White Sox and the Tigers in the west.

Clark Griffith came so near getting the coveted flag in the American league in 1912 that he is busy already preparing to clinch the next one.

Manager George Stovall of the Browns says that he is against baseball players writing for papers. He must have been reading some of it.

George Baumgardner is a real find for the St. Louis Browns. He should be a great pitching asset for George Stovall during the season of 1913.

The latest in turbulent St. Louis is that Powell and Stephens, two of the oldest of the Browns in point of service, are to be released in favor of younger blood.

PLAYERS GET TOO MUCH COIN

Magnates Anxious to Revise Rules for Division of Gate Receipts of World's Series.

If certain baseball magnates have their way the rules governing the division of world's series receipts will be radically amended.

It will be suggested that the money set aside for the players of the two contending teams in the world's series be limited to a guarantee for each man instead of a percentage.

No less a person than August Herrmann, chairman of the National baseball commission, favors a plan by which each member of the winning team in the world's series will receive $1,000 while each member of the losing team will get $750.

This money, according to the Herrmann idea, will be deducted from 60 per cent. of the first four games, the balance to be distributed equally among the players of the other fourteen major league teams.

If such an amendment should be adopted, the world's series would develop into a big benefit for all the major league players.

It is also hinted that the national commission may find its 10 per cent. rakeoff reduced one-half. The commission's share of the spoils has steadily increased each year until $50,000 was set aside after the recent struggle between the Giants and Red Sox. Several club owners insist that the commission's portion should not exceed $25,000, in which event the balance could be split up among the men who pay the salaries of all major league players.

The world's series has grown to such enormous proportions that the impression prevails among baseball men that the players are getting too much money.

If the plan to curtail the shares of the teams taking part in the world's series is adopted, it will be interesting to learn the attitude of the recently organized Baseball Players' Fraternity.

The membership list includes nearly 300 major league players, all of whom would be glad to receive a piece of world series coin.

M'CARTHY HAS GOOD RECORD

Pittsburg Player Lands in Fourth Among Second Baseman of All National League Teams.

One of the most promising players on the Pittsburg team is little McCarthy, who filled in at second base when Miller was put on the initial sack. Late in the season McCarthy was supplanted by Butler, the St. Paul star. McCarthy participated in 105 games, finishing with a record of .962.

Second Baseman McCarthy.

Unique Stadium for Yale.

The new Yale stadium to be started shortly will be the largest of its kind in America and unique in many respects. The amphitheater will be bowl-shaped, a feature entirely individual. It will be 60 feet deep and will seat 60,000 persons and can be extended to seat 100,000 if desired. It will cost $300,000 and other improvements to the Yale field athletic equipment will make the total expenditure $700,000.

Funds for the work of construction will be provided by a bonding system, which will allow the general public to purchase at face value tickets to all the games in the stadium. In case a $100 bond is bought the purchaser will be allowed to buy two tickets to every game for fifteen years.

Training Dates.

The training dates of the Cincinnati Reds have been announced. They will leave Cincinnati on March 4 for French Lick Springs. They will remain in Mobile until March 26, when they return direct to Redland. On March 29, 30 and 31 the Reds will play the New York Americans, April 4, 5, and 6 the Boston Americans, and on April 7, 8 and 9 the Detroit Americans, opening the regular season on April 10.

Eleven Champions Off the List.

Of the Athletics who won the pennant in 1910, the following are no longer upon the Philadelphia roster: Catchers Livingston and Donohue; Pitchers Morgan, Krause, Dygert and Atkins; Infielders Davis, Houser and Derrick; Outfielders Lord and Hartsel.

White Sox Sensation.

Babe Borton, the first sacker of the White Sox, is looked upon as a sensation for the coming campaign. Jimmy Callahan did not think Borton had it in him to make a finished first baseman in the big show.

Harness Racing on Christmas.

The Toronto Driving Club will distribute $7,200 in prizes for harness races to take place during the Christmas holidays.

Cubs to Train in Florida.

President Murphy of the Chicago Cubs has decided upon Florida as the training grounds for his team next spring. No definite spot has been selected as yet.

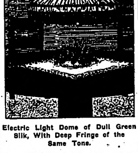
LIGHTING THE TABLE

MATTER ALWAYS WORTHY OF CAREFUL CONSIDERATION.

Device Seen Recently Permits the Use of Candles Which Do Not Require to Be Constantly Watched —The Color Scheme.

Artificial lighting for the table that meets all the requirements is sometimes hard to arrange. The light should be shaded to a point below the level of the eyes. At the same time it should not be so placed that it will obstruct a clear view across the table. The low, dome-like electroliers in the newer apartments and houses meet these requirements very satisfactorily. Probably the easiest and least expensive way of solving the lighting question in a room where a high chandelier has to be depended upon is the use of candles. Four clear glass candlesticks of Colonial pattern will serve the purpose; silver ones are also effective. There are holders for candles that relieve one of the worry of watching them, and that guard against the dangers of candle grease dripping on the table. These are hollow white tubes, in which the candle is put. A spring arranged under it pushes it up as fast as it burns away. So the candle requires no watching. With the shade over it, this artificial candle, which is made of a rather translucent composition, looks like wax.



Electric Light Dome of Dull Green Silk, With Deep Fringe of the Same Tone.

As a general thing mahogany furniture is best suited for dining room use. Dark oak and other finishes are good also. The main thing is to select pieces that are dignified and rather conservative in design, rather than ornate or in line with the latest fads. They should be substantial and firmly built, without being bulky or hard to move. Especial care should be exercised in selecting the chairs, most of the chairs designed for the dining room being torturously uncomfortable. Fortunately, the foolish idea that one must sit primly erect at table and leave it with a backache is rapidly being overcome by the more general use of really comfortable armchairs. This honor has always been accorded to the head and foot of the table. It seems to be the inclination to allow comfort for the rest of the family.

The size and style of furniture must depend on the shape and dimensions of the room it is bought for; if one is likely to move about much, that should also be a consideration. Among the best reproductions are the Sheraton and Adams type of furniture heading the list. These are very similar in general character, and have probably retained their popularity largely because of the attractiveness and practicability of the buffets. The Sheraton chairs and tables are also charming in design. Mission types are, many of them, very good looking also, though they may lack some of the elegance of design found in the older types.

The lighting and coloring are the important features. The color scheme and artificial lighting must be worked out by the individual to the best advantage, according to the case in hand. Keeping things simplified is merely a matter of selecting the best of what is available and discarding the rest. It is safe to adopt the plan of not using everything you have just because you happen to have it.—New York Tribune.

Revival of Braid.

The revival of braid is a great factor in the evolution of this year's frocks. Not only does it add a desirable note of solidity and smartness so essential to winter clothes, but, further, it is strongly suggestive of hard-wearing properties. Braid, again—in a very fine, silky make—is admirable as a trimming for the ninon bodice of the three-pieced costume.

Wide Jabots.

The spreading jabots are much in vogue. They may be square, pointed or rounded, tucked or fulled, but they should be made of shadow lace.

HATS OF FASHIONABLE FAVOR

Soft Crowns Have Caught the Fancy of Parisians, and So of All the World.

Everywhere in Paris the principal feature of the hats for this season is the soft crown. For forming these soft-crowned hats a thick cotton tulle without any stiffening is used. From all that can be gathered, the real aigrette diminishes in favor. All sorts of little feathers, particularly those of pigeons and chickens, are much used, the natural chicken feathers varying from light yellow to brick red, and the favorite way of arranging them is in a band almost covering the brim of the hat and sticking up in all directions, five of the largest feathers being placed upright at the back of the hat. These, with the very short breast feathers, tinted in the required shades, give the effect of flowers. Quills have come into use again, and will form one of the simplest and most popular varieties of trimming.

FOR KEEPING CROCHET WORK

Little Bag That Is Almost a Necessity When One Is Fond of That Pastime.

A little bag is so useful for keeping crochet or knitting in, as the work keeps so much cleaner than if left lying about as it is.

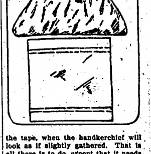
A very dainty little bag for the purpose can be made from a mercerized handkerchief with a colored border, which may be bought for a few cents.

Very little else is required, only just a little white tape, two pieces of whalebone and a little baby ribbon.

To make the bag, lay the handkerchief out flat, and along the top and bottom of it, an inch from the border, run a piece of tape, as a slot for the whalebone to go through.

Now fold the handkerchief exactly in two, and seam up the side to where the tape ends.

The whalebones must not be long as the tape, but the ends of the whalebone must be fastened under ends of the tape, when the handkerchief will look as if slightly gathered. That is all there is to do, except that it needs two little loops of baby ribbon, one on the center of each side. These form the handles.



Bows can be added to the corners.

DICTATES OF FASHION

Antique jewelry is more than ever in evidence.

Two materials are frequently combined in the new wraps.

Wide fur cuffs and collar are used upon the tailored coats.

A noticeable feature of the year is the vogue for mingling furs.

The high waist line continues to find favor among the ultrafashionable.

Much real lace and hand embroidery is shown in the shops for neckwear.

Roman striped ribbons for sashes are a gay and charming note in the fashion world.

Skunk fur, plush, maline and paradise all together appear on some of the new hats.

One of the newest features of brassieres is the trimming down the center of the front.

Lace sashes and sleeves are another method of using lace and producing a filmy effect.

In time realism produces and ends in the comic—realism is caricature.—Gordon Craig.

VOGUE FOR COLORED GLOVES

Have Much to Recommend Them, and the Idea May Be Taken Up in This Country.

I wonder whether the attempt to introduce colored gloves will find favor in this country. I was pleased the other day with the appearance of a pair of duck egg blue kid gloves of three-quarter length heavily stitched with black silk, because they were a change from the champagne, dove and white that one usually sees.

The worst of such an innovation is that it tempts those who love the bizarre note in dress to wear more and more brilliant colors, and the very bright ones are trying on the hands.

Otherwise there is a distinct note of smartness in the new colored gloves provided they intensify one of the color schemes of a dress, or add to a black or gray costume a note of definite brightness.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Agreement exists in disagreement.—Lucan.

TURKS HAVE NEW PEACE PROPOSALS

LONG PROCESS OF BARGAINING EXPECTED BEFORE CONFERENCE ENDS.

AUSTRIANS STILL ARMED

Failure to Demobolize Continues to Cause Anxiety.—Montenegro Determined Not to Yield Points.

London, Dec. 26.—The expedition with which the Turkish government has decided upon counter peace proposals leads to the assumption that they will be equally wide from what are likely to be the eventual terms of the peace treaty as were the demands of the allies and there still is a prolonged process of bargaining to be gone through before the conference is ended. Austria's failure to demobolize, however, is a greater source of disquiet to all concerned than the task of arranging peace.

Montenegro Excited.

This is more especially the case with the Montenegrin delegates who were considerably excited over the rumor that now that Austria has obtained what she wants from Servia, she wished either to prevent Montenegro from taking Scutari by incorporating it in Albania or to make the Montenegrin occupation of Scutari the price of Austrian occupation of Mount Lowchen.

This mount, which rises to a height of about 5,500 feet, almost perpendicularly, dominates the gulf of Cattaro, the greatest Austrian naval stronghold in the Adriatic. But now Montenegro, with its batteries on Mount Lowchen, commands the gulf.

M. Miyuskovitch has declared to all the ambassadors that Montenegro would rather be exterminated than yield Lowchen or renounce Scutari. He said:

"It naturally is absurd to speak of declaring war against Austria, but if Vienna had any such pretensions she would have to wipe out every soul in Montenegro. I, myself, would be there, sword in hand, and I would sell my life dearly."

Russia May Object.

Moreover it is not believed that Russia would ever permit the annihilation of the small kingdom which for centuries has represented the slav stronghold on the Adriatic shores, and in this connection additional attention is drawn to the fact that Russia is taking means to prevent her continued war preparations from becoming known.

Several of the peace delegates were away from London for Christmas. Those who remained spent the day quietly at their hotels or with friends.

Porte Wires Proposals.

Constantinople.—The Porte telegrapher to Rechad Pasha at London counter peace proposals as decided upon by the council of ministers. The exact nature of the proposals has not been revealed but the official view of the situation is still hopeful.

Turks Make Strong Stand.

London.—The Vienna correspondent of the Times says that although Christmas leave was given to some reverist officers, there has been no slackening of the military precautions.

A Salonika dispatch to the Times says that in view of the determined stand the Turks are making at Janina a fourth Greek division is now embarking for Preveza.

Kills Alleged Chicken Thief.

Iowa City, Iowa, Dec. 26.—Ernest Reasland, a farmer, killed Frank Alberhasky, who is said to have been caught in the act of stealing Alberhasky's chickens. After finding Alberhasky in his hen-house Reasland knocked the man down and then called a physician from here to attend him. While the physician was on his way to the Reasland home, the farmer struck his victim with a piece of cordwood and killed him. Reasland says he acted in self-defense.

Explosion After Taft Passes.

Panama, Dec. 26.—Fifteen minutes after President Taft had passed on his way to the ball in his honor Christmas night, in the National theater, a kiosk near the central station on Central avenue, the principal street of the town, was blown up with dynamite while the street was still lined with police. The mayor and the reception committee hurried from the ball to the scene of the dynamiting. The police are investigating the cause.

Committees Changed.

Washington, Dec. 26. — Committee assignments in the house, made necessary by changes in membership, will be considered at a Democratic caucus, which has been called for Jan. 7.

Dies After Christmas Dinner.

Lancaster, Pa., Dec. 26.—After eating his Christmas dinner, Rev. Henry G. Ganss, rector of St. Mary's Catholic church of this city and widely known as a musician and composer, was stricken with apoplexy and died.

Gas Kills Salesman.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Dec. 26.—Thomas R. Price, salesman for a local company, was found dead in his room. His body was found seated in a chair, where he evidently had been reading when the gas fumes overcame him.

WELCOME FOR GOV. WILSON

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA, READY FOR PRESIDENT-ELECT.

Bonfires Will Blaze On Every Hill When Train Crosses Border.

Staunton, Va., Dec. 26. — With all arrangements practically completed, Staunton, the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson, president-elect, enthusiastically waits the arrival of its distinguished son Friday night, which will mark the beginning of the celebration in honor of his home-coming. The city is in gala attire for the celebration and no event in Virginia in recent years has attracted more attention.

Elaborate preparations have been made to extend the president-elect a royal welcome. Probably the most spectacular feature of the celebration will be the heralding of the arrival in Virginia of the distinguished visitor by the glare of bonfires. From the time his special train crosses the state line at Alexandria until it arrives in Staunton, Governor Wilson's approach will be signalized by hundreds of bonfires.

The celebration will bring to Staunton prominent members of the United State senate and house of representatives, state officials, including Governor Mann and hosts of friends of the president-elect. The climax of entertainment will occur Saturday when a parade, participated in by federal, state and other military organizations and civic bodies, will be reviewed by the president-elect.

Mr. Wilson is scheduled to arrive in Staunton at 7:50 p. m. An appropriate welcome will be extended to him at the station, after which he will be escorted to the house where he was born, the Presbyterian manse, when his father was pastor of the local Presbyterian church. There he will be received by Rev. A. M. Frazer, as the official representative of the city and his host during his visit. Tomorrow evening there will be a torchlight procession and a local street demonstration with addresses by prominent visitors to the city.

On Saturday morning an informal reception will be held at the home of Dr. Frazer, at which the guest of honor will receive city and county officials, honored visitors and members of the Wilson celebration committees. Then will occur the military and civic parade.

In the afternoon Dr. Frazer will deliver, from the front porch of the Mary Baldwin seminary, an address of welcome to Mr. Wilson, to which he will respond. Following this, the president-elect will hold a public reception at the seminary. At night an old-time Southern dinner will end the festivities.

FASHIONABLE NEGROES.

Syndicate Formed to Operate in Real Estate in Many Cities.

Chicago, Dec. 26.—Fashionable summer resorts in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and even winter resorts in Florida, Alabama and California are to be the scenes of operations of a Chicago negro syndicate under the name of the Lincoln Athletic and Social Club.

This was brought out by statements made by those interested in the sale of the Lake Geneva, Wis., property which, it was reported, Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist, had purchased as a present for Lucile Cameron Johnson, his white wife.

The statements were made by Judson G. Sherman, who sold the Lake Geneva property to the negro syndicate, and W. E. Harris and James H. Porter, said to be leading spirits in the scheme.

To get property wherever it can be purchased in a fashionable district or resort, whether it be Lake Geneva or Geneva, Switzerland, if it is popular and will bring reward is the purpose of the organization, according to W. H. Harris.

"The object of this club is to make money," said Harris. "We intend to buy property wherever we think we can make money out of it. The members of the club are all negroes of means and have capital enough to swing almost any kind of a real estate deal."

New Equipment for S. P. R. R.

Portland, Ore., Dec. 26.—Announcement has been made by Assistant General Freight Agent Gearty of the Southern Pacific railroad that his company has just placed for delivery next season, orders for 70 engines and 9,635 cars. The aggregate cost of the equipment will be approximately $10,000,000.

Swiss Legation Changes.

Berne, Switzerland, Dec. 26.—Ernest Baumann, secretary of the Swiss legation at Paris, has been transferred to Washington. Henri Martin, who holds the post at Washington, has been transferred to Montreal as consul general.

Farm Engineers in Session.

Chicago, Dec. 26.—One of the chief topics of discussion at the annual meeting of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers, which opened in the Great Northern hotel today, will be the advisability of holding in this country a contest of gas tractors. President H. W. Riley, of Ithaca, spoke this afternoon, and papers were read by O. W. Sjogren on tests of corn planters, C. A. Ocock on the draft of the plow, and Eugene Becker on isolated gas lighting plants. The meeting lasts through Saturday.

3,000,000 FED BY SALVATION ARMY

5,000 HUNGRY ONES FILLED AND MANY CLOTHED IN NEW YORK.

'BIG TIM' STILL LIBERAL.

Gives Customary Dinner and Shoe Tickets to Poor—Immigrants Cared for at Ellis Island.

New York, Dec. 26.—The Christmas spirit prevailed in New York and the multitudes of the poor felt the beneficient results.

The Salvation Army caring for 300,000 persons throughout the country, provided for 25,000 here. At the Ninth regiment armory, 5,000 baskets of food were presented to representatives of as many families. Each basket held enough good things to feed five persons. Clothing and fuel will be exchanged in return for tickets handed to the 5,000 people. These were given to thousands of children after the hungry had been fed.

Congressman Liberal.

Congressman "Big Tim" Sullivan, beloved of the Bowery derelict, gave his customary Christmas dinner to 5,000 homeless men. When they had broken fast with food such as most of them had not tasted in months, pipes and tobacco were given, together with a ticket which will bring each man shoes and socks on Feb. 6. "Big Tim" himself spent Christmas ill in bed.

At homes for the poor and at waterfront missions, thousands more were similarly entertained. At Ellis Island 2,000 immigrants enjoyed their first American Christmas. In Madison Square the musicipal Christmas tree again glittered for several hours and crowds stood near it to enjoy the sight and the Christmas music provided. The Christmas heart of one city magistrate prompted him to discharge all prisoners arrested for intoxication.

$1,000,000 For Wall Street.

New York, Dec. 26.—A tidy little fortune in Christmas gifts was placed in Wall street's Christmas stockings. It is estimated that about $1,000,000 was paid out this year in Christmas presents to the army of employees in the financial district. Distribution has been going on for a week but in the majority of cases payments of bonuses was made on the day before Christmas.

Gould Wedding in Two Weeks.

New York, Dec. 26.—Although neither Miss Helen M. Gould nor her fiance Finley J. Shepard, will discuss their plan, it is believed that their wedding will take place within two weeks. Mr. Shepard, in refusing to discuss the coming wedding, said that the matter rested entirely in the hands of Miss Gould. Mr. Shepard and his financee spent Sunday together and it is believed talked over the wedding plans with Miss Gould's family at Miss Gould's home.

Indian Viceroy Improving.

Delhi, India, Dec. 26.—The latest official bulletin issued concerning the condition of the viceroy, Baron Hardinge, who was severely injured by a bomb thrown by an Indian fanatic, describes his progress as satisfactory, but adds that the physicians believe that he will not be able to resume his duties within two or three weeks. The temperature of the patient is normal and the pain is subsiding. The perpetrator of the outrage has not been apprehended.

Boat and Six Men Missing.

St. Pierre, N. F., Dec. 26.—The crew of the British schooner Aldine, numbering probably six men, is believed to have perished in Tuesday's gale. At daybreak yesterday the wreck of the vessel was found on the north side of St. Pierre roads. There was no trace of her crew.

Vaudeville Actress Stricken.

Stamford, Conn., Dec. 26.—Miss Margaret Hyatt, a vaudeville actress, was stricken with heart disease while playing at a local theater and died a few minutes later in the wings of the stage. She was 40 years old.

Think Quicksand Victim Dead.

Streator, Ill., Dec. 26.—Hope for the rescue of Henry Luke, the track man who was swallowed up in quicksand Tuesday afternoon, has almost been abandoned.

Body Found in River.

Minneapolis, Dec. 26.—Workers at the government dam found the body of an unidentified man floating in the river.

Taft Reviews Work.

Panama, Dec. 26.—Christmas day was spent by President Taft largely in an inspection of the various canal works.

$6,300 Gift For Mayor.

Minneapolis, Dec. 26.—It was a beautiful Christmas day for James C. Haynes. No crippled, poverty stricken child, suddenly and unexpectedly coming into possession of a Christmas tree and myriad presents all his own, reached such full realization of happiness as did the retiring mayor of Minneapolis. Mr. Haynes was given a purse of $6,300 and an illuminated address in book form, bound in vellum, containing the names of the subscribers to the fund

MISS HELEN COX

Miss Helen Cox, charming daughter of the newly-elected governor of Ohio, has been visiting Miss Genevieve Clark in Washington. She is not yet eighteen years old, and attends a girls' school at Waterbury, Conn.

CAPT. LOST; FAMILY IS PLUCKY

WIDOW AND ORPHANS STRUGGLE AGAINST WANT.

Prisoners in Cook County Jail Are Given Vaudeville Performance.

Chicago, Dec. 26.—In the gladness of Christmas time, Chicagoans forgot the family of Capt. Herman Schuenemann, who with his crew of 20 men, went to the bottom of lake Michigan a few weeks ago while returning from northern Michigan with a cargo of trees for the yuletide.

After it was established that the captain and his crew had perished, the wife and daughters of the master of the Christmas ship attempted to fortify themselves against want by bringing a new cargo of trees to the city. They were set up for sale down on the river bank and every day the widow and her orphans worked hard, making wreaths and arranging other stock.

Many old customers came and bought but not nearly all of the "regulars" remembered to buy. And only a few new customers came. So Christmas night when darkness fell and the last hope of another sale had passed, the family found itself still in possession of a considerable amount of unsold stock. But the widow was plucky.

"I don't want charity," she said. "I'll fight it out. Next year we'll sell trees again, and maybe business will be better."

Prisoners at the county jail were disappointed too, when the singers from the Chicago Grand Opera company failed to give a concert which had been planned. Jailer Davies, however, went into the rooming house district of North Clark street and managed to gather several acrobats, monologists and other performers who have been showing at nickel theaters and other small houses, for a performance. A dinner followed.

Eighteen hundred men and boys in the house of correction sang "The Star Spangled Banner," while a band played the tune. These prisoners also were given a feast.

CASE READY FOR JURY.

All Arguments Will Close Within a Few Hours.

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 26.—The cases of the 40 labor union officials accused of promoting the McNamara dynamiting plots in the iron workers' strikes against employers of non-union labor, will go to the jury within a few hours.

At the close of all arguments Federal Judge Albert B. Anderson will instruct the jury. It is understood the court's outline of the law as to what testimony shall be applied to certain defendants will require about an hour.

The jurors will then retire to deliberate as to the men who, headed by Frank M. Ryan, president of the International association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, were brought here three months ago from cities scattered from Boston to Los Angeles, to figure as defendants in what is said to be the most important trial of its kind ever held in a federal court.

Orozco Freed; Is Re-arrested.

San Antonio, Texas, Dec. 26.—Col Pascual Orozco, father of Gen. Pascual Orozco, leader of the Mexican revolution in the north, was released from confinement in the military prison at Fort Sam Houston, under bonds of $2,500, on the charge of violating neutrality laws. He was immediately rearrested by the civil authorities on a warrant in which the Mexican government charges him with robbery, alleged to have been committed in the state of Chihuahua.

EBERHART WELCOMED.

Celebration at Mankato in Honor of His Second Election as Chief Executive.

Mankato.—Governor A. O. Eberhart was given a rousing welcome by the residents of Mankato Thursday evening on his second homecoming after being elected Governor of Minnesota. Hundreds shook his hand as he stood in the receiving line at the Saulpaugh hotel, and 200 persons sat down at a banquet in his honor.

People came from St. Peter and other near-by towns. Democrats mingled with Republicans, and there was a good sprinkling of Bull Moose. Regardless of peditacl affiliation, should honor to a citizen of Mankato.

The Governor and staff arrived from St. Paul at 3 P. M., and an impromptu reception was held at the depot. The formal reception took place between 7 and 8:30 o'clock.

Benjamin Taylor was toastmaster at the banquet, held in the dining-room, which was decorated with flags and flowers. Among the speakers were C. E. Wise, editor of the Mankato Daily Review, a Democratic newspaper. He said that every one in the city, regardless of political affiliation, should be proud to know the Governor.

The Bull Moose had its inning when F. F. Ellsworth, who at the Progressive meeting in St. Paul, proposed a third state ticket, rose to welcome home Governor Eberhart. He proposed a rising toast to the guest and was cheered roundly.

Joseph H. Beek of St. Paul, secretary of the Association of Commerce, reviewed the services of Governor Eberhart to the state. He mentioned the state Conservation congress and said the National Conservation congress was brought to Minnesota largely by his efforts.

When the Governor rose to speak he was greeted with cheers. He spoke feelingly, saying the reception made him happy in the thought that his own people were satisfied with his record in office. He launched into several timely subjects, referring to the troubles in Oregon over the capital punishment law.

"I still maintain that capital punishment is an outrage," he said. "Never once since the law was abolished in Minnesota has a sheriff or police official told me it has increased the tendency to crime."

C. H. Biorn of St. Paul and L. C. Hunt of Seattle, formerly a Mankato editor, also spoke.

BUILDING DESTROYED.

Plant of Prest-o-Lite Company Is Wrecked—One Killed.

Minneapolis.—The light charging plant of the Prest-o-Lite company, Charles street and Hampden avenue, Midway, was destroyed by an explosion. Henry Hohn, night watchman, was crushed to death by tons of falling brick.

The explosion shattered windows in houses within a radius of eight blocks. The report was heard for two miles. Damage to the plant is estimated at $40,000.

Hohn's burned body was found in the ruins nearly four hours after the explosion.

Waseca Board Sustained.

Waseca.—Judge Childress has made a decision in favor of the water and light board in the case of the W. J. Armstrong Company versus the City of Waseca. The action was one in mandamus and was brought by Mr. Armstrong, the relator, to compel the board to furnish power to run and operate three motors which he recently installed in his bottling works. The board offered to furnish sufficient power to operate the bottling works if Armstrong would install a one-phase motor. It refused to furnish electric power to run the three-phase motor for the reason that it would be necessary to install an extra meter and two transformers and incur other expense. Judge Childress held that the board need not furnish power for the three-phase motors and discharged the writ of mandamus.

House Bespattered With Paint.

Marshall.—The farm house of Hans Lavesson, living near Lake Benton, was bespattered with black paint, the mixture being applied with a squirt gun, which was found in the pasture of John Hanson. Hearing an unusual noise outside, Mr. Lavesson arose and saw the outline of a man using the squirt gun. Mr. Lavesson secured a revolver and went out on the front porch, whereupon, the man with the paint ran. The vandal was not found.

Unhappy—Commits Suicide.

St. Cloud.—The prospect of an unhappy Christmas for his family was the apparent cause of the suicide of Paul Baer, aged 32, foreman of a cigar factory at Melrose, who drank the contents of a bottle of carbolic acid. His wife found him just as he had taken the dose. Baer had been lamenting the fact that he was unable to give his wife and four children the Christmas celebration they desired, and this was apparently the only cause.

BENCH SEAT AT STAKE.

Ballots of 137 Precincts Will Be Inspected—Olsen Proves His Citizenship.

Marshall.—Governor Eberhart has appointed Judge G. E. Quale, of Willmar, to sit in the Mathews-Olsen judicial election contest, started here by Robert Heilman.

Several allegations are set forth by Mr. Heilman as grounds for contest, the principal of which are that over 200 votes for Mathews were counted for Olsen; that many illegal votes were cast and counted for Olsen; that more than 200 voters failed to mark their ballots for either Mathews or Olsen, but that their votes were, nevertheless, counted for Judge Olsen; that many ballots that were unmarked for the office of district judge were afterwards, without the consent of the voters casting such ballots, marked and counted as votes for Olsen; that in some of the precincts the judges were not sworn as required by law, and, in some the judges were not citizens; that at several precincts the judges left the polls and ballot boxes, and that in at least one precinct all the judges were asleep except one while the ballots were being counted, and that the judges did not return the ballots to the county auditors as required by law.

Both sides have asked that the eighth and last allegation that Judge Olsen is not a citizen, be stricken out, the defense presenting a certified copy of citizenship papers, taken out in St. Louis county by Olsen in October, 1890.

The inspection of the ballots will be started here on Monday by a committee appointed for that purpose. A committee will count the ballots in Lincoln county, then Redwood, Nicollet and lastly Brown county.

There were 12,862 votes cast and counted for the office of judge in the district and I. M. Olsen was declared elected by 104 votes. The ballots of 137 precincts will be inspected.

The trial will follow the inspection of ballots, probably on Jan. 8.

RECOUNT STARTS.

Inspectors of Ballots Cast for Ninth District Judge At Work.

Marshall.—The recount of ballots for judge of the ninth judicial district began Dec. 23. The following were selected by the contestant, and contestee to inspect the ballots, and were duly appointed by the presiding judge, G. E. Quale, of Willmar.

For Lyon county Spurgeon Odell and J. G. Schulz were chosen, and selected Sheriff M. E. Grannon as the third member. For Lincoln county L. P. Johnson, of Ivanhoe, and Chas. H. Kelson, of Tyler, were chosen, and agreed on the third man. For Redwood county Charles Thompson and Albert H. Emerson and A. C. Dolliff, all of Redwood Falls, are acting as the inspection committee. M. E. Stone and W. G. Laumann were selected for Nicollet county, and selected a third. For Brown county Fred Pfaender and Carl Crone, of New Ulm, and Albert Hauser of Sleepy Eye, are booking over the ballots.

Only one county at a time will be counted, and after all have been inspected the trial will start at New Ulm, probably on Jan. 8.

Several rules were ordered, chief among which are the following: The ballots are to be examined in the presence of the county auditor, he being their legal custodian; the ballots from each precinct will be examined and counted separately, and the ballots from one precinct must be completed and resealed and returned to the auditor before the ballots from another precinct are produced for examination the ballots must not be disfigured or defaced in any way.

So far as applicable, the rules and regulations of the election laws are to govern. The inspection is proceeding in the following order: Lyon, Lincoln, Redwood, Nicollet and Brown.

Here's a "12-12-12-12-12" Baby.

St. Cloud.—"12-12-12-12-12" is the entry on the page of the family Bible of Mr. and Mrs. Mathias Solkog, of Luxumberg town to whom a baby boy was born Thursday, Dec. 12. The boy was the twelfth in the family, weighed twelve pounds and was born in the twelfth day of the twelfth month in 1912.

Beaudette Store Robbed.

Beaudette.—The Frank E. Johnson hardware store was burglarized Saturday. Entrance was gained through the front window. Nine rifles and shotguns, and a large quantity of ammunition were stolen.

Flesh Saved Her From Death.

East Grand Forks.—Because she is so fleshy, Miss Lucy Borcher of this city is alive today. She became unconscious while bathing and two hours later her father, failing to get an answer to summons, broke the bath room door and found her lying unconscious in the tub, which was half filled with water. Her body was wedged against the sides of the bath tub, preventing her head from going under the water. A gas burner had consumed the supply of oxygen.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Caledonia.—Roy Abbotts, a trapper, shipped over $400 worth of furs to a Minneapolis firm.

Sanborn.—Mrs. Bertha Aslakson received injuries when her home burned from which she died.

Caledonia.—An adjourned term of the district court for Houston county convened here on Monday.

Albert Lea.—Rev. Duncan Weeks of Faribault, has been called to fill the pulpit of Christ's church, in this city.

Albert Lea.—An epidemic threatens to decimate the dog population of Albert Lea. More than a dozen have already died.

East Grand Forks.—Robbers used James Perret's fur cap to good advantage. The cap was drawn down over his face so securely that he was unable to see them. They took $25, and a gold watch.

Caledonia.—At the annual meeting of the Houston County Agricultural society C. J. Wheaton was elected president, W. F. Deters vice president, Loyd Duxbury secretary and R. B. Sprague treasurer.

Anoka.—An analysis of the water in the new artesian wells at the city powerhouse show no contaminaton of any kind. It is expected that pure drinking water will be flowing through the mains by January 1.

St. Cloud.—Great preparations were made for the opening of St. Cloud's white way. A big carnival with a parade, athletic events and music by three bands made the evening a lively one. Mayor Seburger turned on the lights.

Waseca.—The three daughters of Mrs. Bertha Roske—Lillie, Bertha and Ida—were married at the German Evangelical church to Lawrence Wolter, Albert Born and Charles Born. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Paseer.

St. Cloud.—A saloonkeeper, desiring to transfer his license, will have to present a statement showing that all his creditors have been satisfied or the commission cannot grant the application, according to a new ordinance passed by the council.

Virginia.—Shuffling along from partial paralysis resulting from a self-inflicted wound after he had killed Lucy Bocovitch here because she spurned his offer of marriage, Tom Marinsel, convicted of murder in the first degree, was sentenced to life imprisonment. Through an interpreter he told Judge Hughes he was crazy when he killed the girl.

St. Cloud.—The jury in the case of the state against John Sharbono, charged with assaulting and robbing an old man at Melrose, returned a verdict of not guilty. In the case of the State vs. Moorman, in which the defendant was charged with assaulting John Dibble, a verdict of assault in the third degree was returned and Moorman was fined $50.

St. Paul.—Mumps, plain, ordinary mumps, has appeared among operators of the Northwestern Telephone Company in Minneapolis. Physicians declare this kind of mumps is not contagious over the telephone. The person who enters the operating room and says, "I've got a sore throat," might just as well set free a trapful of rats in that room of femininity.

Albert Lea.—The Albert Lea Packing company's plant is practically complete, and will start operation Jan. 1. It is strictly an Albert Lea enterprise. The building and equipment are the most modern that money could buy. The capacity will be 800 hogs and 100 cattle a day. As Albert Lea is in a splendid hog country, the handling of pork will be made a specialty. C. L. Brooks will have charge of the plant.

Waterville.—The Consumers' Power company turned on the lights in Waterville before Christmas. Its large power plants at Cannon Falls and Rapidan are connected here, and it has completed a distributing station. In addition to furnishing light and power for this city, the station here will also supply Waseca, Morristown and Janesville. Elysian and Madison Lake will get similar service in the spring.

Triumph.—Because his shotgun was loaded with large-sized shot, Harvey Redimus, a farmer living near Triumph, let two theives get away with two of his largest hogs a few nights ago. Redimus was awakened by a commotion at his hog house, and gave chase, but refrained from firing at the thieves because his gun was loaded with a large-size shot, which he knew would mean death for the robbers should he fire and hit them.

Argyle.—Despite the fact that the responsibilities of threshing and attending to their farm work delayed farmers in marketing their grain, over 495,000 bushels have been brought here this fall, the general movement beginning about the middle of November. Conditions appear favorable for another year, and farmers were enabled to do a great amount of fall plowing and seeding and other work before the recent snow ended their activities.

Henderson.—A crowd packed the courtroom Saturday night to witness the mock trial by the high school in the case of "The Disappearance of Jenny Brice." A jury was drawn from the audience. Fred Morrisette acting as judge, Gerald Guilbert and Stella Higgins represented the state, and Benjamin Ney and Gertrude Moriarity were the attorneys for the defense. The verdict was "not guilty."

Mora.—Mrs. Engblom, wife of Rev. A. O. Engblom, of this county, was adjudged insane in probate court, and will be taken to the Fergus Falls asylum for treatment.

New Year's Day

> "Old year, you shall not die:
> We did so laugh and cry with you,
> I've half a mind to die with you,
> Old year, if you must die."

TIME and tide wait not. And so we are gathered once more around the couch of the dying year, whose short lifetime has been fraught with new experiences and old failures, with sorrow and with joy to the sons of men. With friendly feelings of regret we watch his solemn passing. The weary sighing of the winter wind over the frozen wastes of snow is a mournful dirge for the days that are gone, for the irrevocable past. Chastening some with the heavy hand of sorrow and woeful loss, showering blessings of happiness and love upon others, the year that is "dying in the night" has striven mightily tobe the friend of all. Even where unmerited misfortune has swamped the high spirit and bruised the aching heart, the old year's passing stirs memories of regret for bright hopes faded, and of gratitude for the few radiant gleams of happiness which have illumined the darkness.

By a natural force of habit, with many the declining moments of the old year are devoted to a sort of spiritual stock-taking. The mistakes and the offenses of the past are canvassed over during this "burial of last year's sins," and resolutions of reformation adopted for future guidance. It has been said that those who make good resolutions are only those who break them. Too often they are simply the impotent products of lingering habit, aroused to life in the bewildering swirl of a customary moral house cleaning, and doomed to a brief existence. A momentary repentance, induced by the solemnity and associations of the season, does not effect much material change in the moral capacity for clean living. Generally, something is bound to give way when new wine is put into old bottles. To do as a matter of course that which is right as it comes is the true secret of a good life, and becomes in time a force more persistent and effectual than the weak-kneed habit of shipping an ill-assorted deck cargo of good resolutions, whose shifting in bad weather will give serious trouble until it is jettisoned, or swept overboard.

But hush! the hour is near. The old man is breathing hard, his eyes grow dim, the hue of death is spreading over his hollow cheeks and wrinkled brows. Soon he will be gone, forgotten with the trouble and sorrow, the joy and delight, he brought in his train. "Across the waste his son and heir doth ride post-haste," and we prepare to salute the rising sun, to make the rafters ring with "The king is dead, long live the king." And so, unmindful of "benefits forgot," with regret and remembrance buried deep in the joy of the moment, we hail the signals of the momentous change—the blaring of sirens and the boom of cannon, the cheering of reveling crowds and the mad joyous clangor of multitudinous bells.

> Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
> The flying cloud, the frosty light:
> The year is dying in the night;
> Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

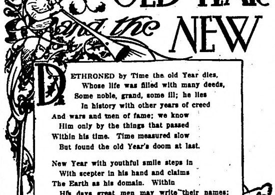
The blessed glad new year is coming, heralded with rejoicing, and resplendent with hope. "There's a new foot on the floor, my friend, and a new face at the door." Bacchus and Venus and bright-eyed Hebe give welcome and homage to the newcomer, and salute the opening of his reign with mirthful song and joyous laughter. The festive celebration of the new year has been a salient feature in the social life of all civilized peoples, ancient and modern, and that characteristic persists in the strenuous life of today.

The time at which the year began varied much among different nations. The Carthaginians, Egyptians, Persians and other nations of antiquity began their year at the autumnal equinox, New Year's day falling on September 22, of modern reckoning, which is also the beginning of the Jewish civil year. The Greeks chose December 22, and afterward June 22. January 1 was first adopted by the Romans, when Julius Caesar brought the civil year into close harmony with the solar, in B. C. 46, but, for many centuries, the example was not followed by subsequent European nations. At one time there were seven different dates for the beginning of the year among the Christian nations, and even successive popes, until comparatively recent times, scarcely ever adopted the same chronology. Russia and the eastern empire of Constantine dated from September 1, and the Mohammedan year, being dependent on the phases of the moon, had and has no fixed beginning. January 1became the accepted date of the New Year among the Catholic nations of Europe in 1582, when Pope Gregory XIII introduced the new style of reckoning, and corrected the accumulated discrepancies between the Julian computation and the actual solar year by striking ten days out of the almanac of that year. By 1700 this date was in general use throughout Europe, but it was not until 1752 that England and her American colonies adopted it.

Ancient and modern civilized peoples, while differing as to the day from which they reckoned the beginning of the civil year, have agreed in distinguishing it by special festivities and religious observances. The Romans dedicated January 1 to the oldest of their gods, Janus of the two faces, one youthful and one aged—a symbol of the wisdom of the god who knows the past and can peer into the future. They sacrificed to him on twelve altars, and were careful so to order their conduct on New Year's day that every word and action should be a happy augury of the twelve months of the coming year. Kindly salutations and presents of figs, dates and sweetmeats were exchanged among the people, holiday dress was worn, and feasting became universal. New Year presents became under the Caesars a source of great personal profit to the ruler, and an onerous burden to his subjects. The infamous Caligula, making it known that his daughter required a dowry at the New Year, walked barefooted over the piles of gold which covered the courtyard of his palace—gifts of the terrorized Roman citizens. How this custom persisted down the ages may be gathered from the fact that, even as late as the reign of William and Mary, the English nobility were accustomed to "send to the king a purse with gold in it, every New Year's tide." Queen Elizabeth's wardrobe and jewelry were almost wholly supplied from the New Year contributions of her subjects, and, although she made return gifts, it is related that she took good care to have the balance well in her own favor.

The early fathers of the church reprobated the immoral and superstitious observances of the pagan festival, and directed that the Christian year should be opened with a day of fasting, prayer and humiliation. The festal character of the day, however, pertinaciously clung to it throughout the ages, and the church preserved its religious aspect, by making it a festival in commemoration of the circumcision. In Catholic countries, New Year's day is a holiday of strict obligation, opening with a solemn midnight mass and the singing of the Te Deum. Many Protestant churches hold a "watch-night service" through the last three hours of the departing year—a solemn service of prayer and song and exhortation—which is hushed into a few minutes of silent meditation as the midnight hour draws near, and then breaks forth into a song of praise, greeting the first moment of the new-born year.

The OLD YEAR and the NEW



DETHRONED by Time the old Year dies,
Whose life was filled with many deeds,
Some noble, grand, some ill; he lies
In history with other years of creed
And wars and men of fame; we know
Him only by the things that passed
Within his time. Time measured slow
But found the old Year's doom at last.

New Year with youthful smile steps in
With scepter in his hand and claims
The Earth as his domain. Within
His days great men may write their names;
Nations may rise, may fall and die;
Mysteries their secrets may unfold,
But ere he knows shall come the cry
"New Year, thou art among the old!"

THE VANISHED YEAR

Once again a year has vanished,
To the realm of bygones banished,
Where the past years sleep in glory—
Not forgotten—gone before—
And the New Year comes to greet us,
On the wings of Time to meet us,
And to tell the old, old story
Of the years that are no more.

In the wings of Time, swift flying,
Lies the Old Year, sighing, dying,
Borne to join the host that slumbers
On that distant unknown shore—
Borne to join the countless legion,
That have crossed that mystic region,
And are counted with the numbers
In that land of Nevermore.

Once again the bells are ringing,
Tidings of the New Year bringing,
With the blythe and gladsome clangor
Of the bells that rang of yore,
And their glad and tuneful pealing,
Brighter, fairer skies revealing,
Bids us banish sorrow, anger,
Think of gladness yet in store.

Let us greet the New Year gladly—
Though we miss the old one sadly—
Let us hope for bright skies o'er us,
Let our dreams be ever fair—
Let us banish care and sorrow,
Hope for gladness on the morrow—
Let us build for days before us
Brighter castles in the air.

CAN YOUR BABY FIND ITS NOSE.

Here Are Some of the Tests for Determining Normal Child.

If a child of three years knows his name and can thrust a chubby finger to his nose, mouth and eyes, when asked about those organs, he's a normal kid. If he can't, then it's time papa and mamma got busy with petty's little think tank, or he'll grow up to be a boob.

This, in plain Boweryesque, is the translation of the formula given in scientific terms by the medical savants of the Mental Hygiene conference and exhibit, who are holding "tests of children" in the hall of the city college, remarks the New York Journal.

"A child of four," continues the scientific formula, "is expected to know its sex and to be able to recognize such objects as a key, knife or a penny, and to tell the comparative length of lines.

"At five a boy or girl should be able to draw a square and to repeat sentences. When a child is six we ask for definitions. I might ask: 'What is a fork?' If a boy answered: 'I eat with a fork,' it would be sufficient for that age, but if he inserted the word 'something' in his definition, as 'A fork is something to eat with,' it would place him in the eight-year class. If he said: 'A piece of tableware,' he would be in the twelve-year class."

A child of ten is asked what he would do if he missed a train. Here the answers vary. Any reply that is an answer is accepted. One child said: "Wait for another." Another said he would "run and catch it." While a boy from the Bronx said he would go home for the day.

What to do if struck by a playmate was the most puzzling of all questions. Boys invariably looked at their mothers when the question was put. "Forgive him," was the answer only a few times.

The best examination passed so far was by seven-year-old Donald Grant of 507 West 138th street, who passed the examination for the child of ten.

REASON FOR HIS GENEROSITY

Small Boy Was Not Giving Away Goslings Simply Out of the Goodness of His Heart.

We were fishing in the James river in the Ozarks, writes a correspondent of The Companion, and for three days had floated down the clear, swift stream, casting as we went. For fifty miles we had not seen a human habitation, although occasional sounds indicated that there were scattered farms beyond the fringe of timber that closely lined the stream.

One morning, when the current was hurrying us along at eight miles an hour, we saw a tow-headed boy pop out of the underbrush on the bank fifty yards ahead.

"Say," he called, as we drifted by, "I'll give you some goslings if you want them!"

"Goslings?" I said, surprised. "Why, what should we do with goslings?"

"I dunno," he replied indifferently.

"What are you doing," I asked, "fishing?"

"No,"—a little rebelliously,—"I'm mindin' an old cow out of the corn."

"Say," he said, a little anxiously, as we were floating by, "you can have them goslings if you want them. I'll show you where they are."

"No, thank you," we said. "We couldn't take care of them."

"There they are,"—he leaned forward and pointed down the bank,—"right down there. You can have 'em if you want 'em."

"That's a funny kid," remarked one of our party, as we drifted by a dozen half-grown goslings at the edge of the water. "Wonder what makes him so generous?"

Just then, loud and shrill, came a woman's voice from the field back in the valley:

"John-nie! John-nie O John-nie! Air you keepin' them goslin's out of the garden?"—Youth's Companion.

RELICS OF KREMLIN

Inclosure Has Long Been Crowning Place of Czars.

Ivan or Bell Tower Contains 36 Bells—In Front of the Arsenal Can Still Be Seen the "Great Gun."

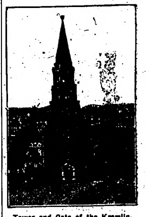
Moscow.—The Kremlin, like the Forbidden City in Pekin, is inclosed by a wall entirely independent of that encircling the city, says William Wisner in the National Geographic Magazine. It marks the part which escaped the great conflagration when the outlying districts of Moscow were burned by the Russians, who were besieged by Napoleon. The present wall replaced one of oak—some 500 years ago—which, like the Great Wall of China, was erected as a defense from the Tartars.

Within this inclosure is the imperial palace, the treasury, the arsenal and three cathedrals, which for centuries have respectively been the places of the crowning, the marrying and the burying of the czars of this great nation. The inclosure also contains a convent and many great monuments. On one side, far below, flows the River Moskva, from which the city takes its name. From the river's opposite bank the view of the splendor of this collection of buildings is unsurpassed.

Probably nowhere in the world does an inclosure of the dimensions of that described by the wall of the Kremlin contain precious stones approximating the value of those displayed here. It has been aptly stated that they should not be counted by thousands, but measured by the peck. To guard them 800 soldiers are constantly in and around these buildings.

The Ivan or Bell tower is the most conspicuous structure in the inclosure and contains 36 bells, two of which are of silver, the largest of the collection weighing 65 tons.

This large bell seems to lose its magnitude when we come to examine the one resting on a stone foundation just outside the tower, which weighs 200 tons. It was originally intended to hang within the walls, but soon after it was cast a fire destroyed the building which sheltered it, causing nine gaping cracks and the displacement of a piece of the bell weighing nine tons. Owing to this misfortune, its tongue has never remained mute.



Tower and Gate of the Kremlin.

Not far from the bell tower stands the arsenal, in front of which is a display of 850 bronze cannon, trophies captured from the Turks and French. Prominent among these is the "great gun," its mouth having a diameter of three feet, surrounded by so thin a shell that regard for safety probably accounts for the fact that it, like the great bell, has never spoken.

These two curios, coupled with Moscow's prevalent paving material, are spoken of as the three ancient wonders of the city. "The heaviest bell which never was rung, and the largest cannon which never was fired, and the greatest amount of cobblestone pavement" (which ought to be fired).

JOKES AS SURGEON WORKS

Stoical Patient Indulges in Merry Quibs and Jests in Pennsylvania Hospital.

Beaver Falls, Pa.—While surgeons carved an operation at the Providence Hospital, J. T. Mecklin, pure food inspector of Ellwood City, lay on the table and jested with those around him.

For some time Mecklin had been afflicted with a disease of the veins in his feet, and the ailment had become so serious that an operation was decided on.

When the surgeons were ready to begin the operation Mecklin refused to take an anaesthetic of any kind and declared that they might proceed with their work, as he was not greatly concerned over the pain.

He never whimpered during the operation, although the surgeons say it was of a very painful nature.

TWIN CASES OF APPENDICITIS

Brother and Sister Stricken and Operated on Close Together at Newark, N. J.

New York.—Stricken within a few hours of each other, Emile and Emily Thomas, twins, aged twelve, of 37 Taylor street, Newark, N. J., are recovering from appendicitis operations in the Newark private hospital. The twins lie side by side amid a mass of flowers sent in by their playmates.

They were stricken on Tuesday. Emily, while playing, suddenly doubled up in pain. The first to [illegible] was her brother, who picked her up and carried her home. A physician was summoned and he found traces of appendicitis. Not long afterward the doctor discovered symptoms in the brother, and both went to the hospital and under the knife.

Things Queer and Curious

Mighty Legs of Frithjof

Emperor Wilhelm of Germany makes a trip each year to Norway, and he now intends to present to that country a unique memorial of his twenty-fifth journey there. This gift is a gigantic statue of Frithjof, the Norwegian hero of a famous Icelandic saga which relates his adventures and is assigned to the thirteenth century. The statue, which is the work of Max Unger, is to be set up next summer on a peninsula of the Sogne Fjord.

THALES WEIGHING 25 TONS

This statue of Thales, representing electricity, is one of twenty-five which weigh about 25 tons each and which are the largest that have ever been cut from single blocks of stone. They were designed by Saint Gaudens and will be placed over the entrance to the Union station in Washington, making a magnificent symbolistic facade.

"DEAD DRUNK" AT AGE OF SIX

After his mother had given him a few drops of whisky, sweetened with sugar, to relieve a cold, six-year-old Charles Vanderbilt of Williamsburg, N. Y., acquired the whisky habit, and as a result was removed to the Williamsburg hospital in a critical condition.

Neighbors advised the mother to give her boy frequent doses of whisky and sugar after he had contracted a cold a week ago. While the child was left alone temporarily he found the bottle and swallowed about five tablespoonfuls of the liquor. When his mother returned she found him in an alcoholic coma and called an ambulance.

HORSE TIES UP RAILROAD

A horse played tag, the horse being "it," with a southbound passenger train on the Wilmington & Columbia division of the Philadelphia & Reading railway in the neighborhood of Glenhall, Pa. The train was delayed nearly an hour and the schedule of the division was badly upset as a result.

The animal first ran on the tracks and waited for the train to approach, then ran a mile in front of the locomotive and waited again. This was repeated several times. After a run of three miles the horse left the railroad at a crossing.

THROUGH A CONCRETE MIXER.

Charles Stevens, aged 30, a negro of Braddock, Pa., while working on a concrete mixer about 30 feet above the ladle at the Edgar Thomson Steel works, fell into the hopper with the wet concrete and was dug out of the mixture of gravel and cement at the other end, where the thoroughly mixed concrete comes out. He was unconscious, but was revived in an hour and recovered.

ETIQUETTE OF THE JUNGLE

A moving-picture firm has been taking some remarkable pictures at a water-hole in Abyssinia of animals which come there from miles around to quench their thirst. It is the etiquette of the jungle for the elephant to drink first. No matter how many animals are around the waterhole, they all stand aside for the greatest beast of all. Many of the animals come 40 to 50 miles for a drink, and there is a truce between even the most deadly enemies. After the elephant comes the rhinoceros. Although most of the other animals observe the water-hole truce faithfully, two rhinos will fight over their precedence.

The cinematograph operator obtained wonderful pictures of two of these huge animals going at it "hammer and tongs." The fight only ended by one of the animals being killed. When the rhinoceros has finished the giraffes drink their fill, followed by zebras. Zebras always travel in herds, and sometimes 40 to 50 will arrive at the waterhole at a time. According to the etiquette of the jungle, however, they only come in fourth for the drinking stakes. The first four animals are fixed in order, but the rest get a drink just how and when they can.

WILD DOGS RAID FARMS

A pack of 20 wild dogs, led by a huge collie, is, with increasing boldness, making daily raids on farms near Thermalito, Cal. The dogs hunt with great cunning, and efforts to exterminate them have resulted in the killing of one. Hogs, chickens, rabbits and turkeys are their victims. The floods of 1907, when the Feather river reached the highest stage ever recorded, is responsible for the marauders, whose forebears were a few tame dogs which were marooned on an island of driftwood. When the water receded the dogs burrowed into the debris and refused to return to domesticity.

HIS NEPHEW'S STEPFATHER

Harry E. Harkness of Altoona has become his nephew's stepfather. Harkness, who is fifty-three, and has been a widower for two years, married his brother's widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Harkness, fifty-three. At the same time that Mrs. Harkness married, her son, Gehring Harkness, married Maud C. Walton. Suppose Gehring Harkness has children, what relation will they be to their father's uncle and stepfather?

For Royal Christmas Feast

Many of the swans on the Thames are the property of the crown and are so branded. Each year as Christmas approaches a number of these "king's cygnets" are caught and taken to pens at Kingston to be fattened for the royal Christmas dinner. Those that his majesty cannot use are presented to some of his personal friends.

QUEER CREATURE OF THE SEA

Sepia is sometimes loosely spoken of as "a sort of Indian ink;" it is something very different from real Indian ink, which is a substance composed of purified soot, gum, camphor, and musk. Sepia is a peculiar animal substance obtained from the ink bags or ink sacs of cuttle fish.

The cuttle fish are a group of singular sea creatures allied to slugs, snails, oysters, and other so-called "shell fish." The cuttle fish has a sort of shell beneath the skin (sold under the name of "cuttle bone"), a pair of large eyes and a horny beak. Like all molluscs, they have no real limbs at all, but from around the head there spring eight or ten long tentacles, each armed with numerous suckers.

By forcibly squirting out the sea water which it has taken in the sepia can shoot backward through the water with great speed. The sepia is interesting, too, as being able to change its color in a measure so as to harmonize with its surroundings. Just under the topmost layer of skin there are distributed all over the surface of the body a number of cells, containing a dark pigment; when these cells are expanded the surface of the body becomes darkly spotted, but as they are contracted the creature looks paler.

Though best developed in the sepia and its nearest allies, nearly every member of the cuttle fish group possesses an ink sac. The ink sac contains the dark pigment secreted by a special gland. When discovered or pursued by an enemy the sepia discharges some of its ink through a sort of funnel or tube; the pigment mixes with water very quickly, and forms a dark cloud of inky water, beyond which the sepia will dart into safety.

Sepias are often caught in nets with fish. The fishermen, despising the cuttles, throw them out upon the beach, and then they may be seen lying in tiny pools of dense black liquid, and continually oozing out more ink in a vain attempt at concealment.

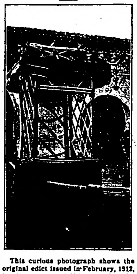
FINDS $4,000 IN MATTRESS

The finding of a small fortune in an old mattress that he was about to burn, was the experience of William Schultz of Rochester, Minn. The mattress had been in the family's possession for years, and some time ago was relegated to the scrap pile. Mr. Schultze decided to burn the mattress and was about to apply the match when he felt a small, hard roll, which he pulled out. It proved to be a roll of greenbacks, amounting to $4,000. Mr. Schultze is unable to explain the presence of the money.

EELS DARKEN THREE TOWNS

As the result of a remarkable run of eels in the Sawkills the towns of Red Hook, Tivoli and Madalin, N. Y., are thrown in darkness nearly every night. The eels cannot be kept out of the machinery in the lighting company's plant. The company has three intake pipes laid out into the stream and into the pipes the eels glide in droves. The clogging of the machinery puts the three villages in darkness

RESIGNATION OF AN EMPEROR



This curious photograph shows the original edict issued in February, 1912, by the emperor of China, in which he abdicated and placed the sovereignty in the hands of the nation. It was written on yellow paper, placed in a sedan chair made of yellow silk and exposed in front of the palace.

AT THE YEAR'S END

WHAT fixed the time for the ending of one year and the beginning of another? More light. In the countries where winter is cold and dark and grim the severest weather comes after the old year goes. It was in less biting air, but in increasing light, that the proof was found of the "turn o' the year."

The dead year is often buried to the dirge of winter's most bitter winds. The frost is going deeper, when the season is normal. Nature's sleep is most profound. There is only one sign that the sun has turned and is coming back. That evidence is a little more daylight, a little less of the darkness of night.

But more light is enough. It makes the change a time of joy, of new hopes and more confident turning to the future. There is the promise of spring in the added light of the day and the promise of growing good and retreating evil in the coming of the new year.

It means that mankind has another chance for better things. It gives hope of a new foothold and endeavor to a fresh start. The world is invited to turn its back on the mistakes and sins and troubles of the past and look to the ever-wonderful possibilities of the unknown time to come.

There is the charm and joy of New Year's. In that revival of drooping confidence, in that lure of the infinite, lies the appeal of the day which is always greeted with enthusiasm, no matter how many generations have seen the hopes of the year's birth wither before its death. After many failures success may come. Who knows?

That is the magic question—"Who knows?" The world gains from year to year in a thousand little things, and sometimes a great evil long endured goes crashing down. Who can say what the limit of triumph may be in the better times to come?

For the world, like every young year, is getting more light. It has more of the sunshine of truth, more of the life-giving rays of knowledge. If they seem cold and sterile, at times, it is because humanity's year is still young. "We are ancients of the earth, and in the morning of the times."

This increasing light of knowledge, this brighter beacon to guide the steps of mankind, must flower and fruit in richer gains than humanity has yet won. It is an accumulating force, like the warmth which the sun gives the earth in spring

The thinkers and dreamers of the world know that this is so. They are inspired by the consciousness that with growing knowledge there must come increased power and higher wisdom to direct and control it for the help and uplifting of mankind.

The faith sees the life and growth, the color and warmth of spring, in the lengthening days of winter. They perceive that the world of men and women, and of the children, too, though still far from the full tide of its summer, is already well into the long new year of the human family. They are as certain of the spring for all mankind as they are that January will pass and May will come.

It is a mistake to reflect too much upon the past. It has its lessons, but the learning of them should not so absorb our attention as to preclude us from incorporating them into our daily life, transmuting the memory and experience into the gold of useful practicability and ready work that yields results.

Introspection was getting so insistently a habit of the New Year that we are beginning to forget it was but a means to an end—the reflective porch to the large and spacious chamber of lofty resolve and accomplishment. We fancy sometimes that a faint suggestion of maudlin sentiment crept into the self-analysis, converting what should have proved a stepping stone to higher planes of activity into a more purgatory of self-abnegation ending in a cul-de-sac. We want to make our reflection an avenue that leads through paths of earnest thought to the high tablelands of glorious endeavor and achievement. The soul itself must be utilitarian and not waste itself in unprofitable penance.

What has the year accomplished for womanhood? There has unquestionably been a remarkable renaissance of the feminine. Woman has broadened her outlook, established her claim to wider recognition of her talents, impressed public life with her power for good, and raised her physical and mental scale of the sex. Thank God, among the general advancement there is one that is inspiringly reactionary—a reversion to the old veneration for the sanctity of motherhood—the holiest and divinest calling of all, a calling involving great sacrifice, great sorrows, but bringing with it, on the other hand, untold compensating joys.

In the medical profession woman has done well, while in the humbler ranks of nursing our efficient hospitals tell their own eloquent tale of the labor done by those who "watch the stars out by the bed of pain."

For the large masses of the girlhood and womanhood the arena of commercial life has widened its doors, and evidence is seen on all hands of the efficiency of the new female recruits to the business ranks. Their presence in this great army of strenuous endeavor will tend to purify and strengthen it, and make it worthier than it has ever been before. The prizes are many, but those who do not gain them must not be disheartened. The very striving after them stiffens the fiber. "The athlete matured for the Olympian game gains strength at least for life."

While I have dwelt in this short review of woman's progress on the more expert phases of her career, it must be pointed out that ability is not the be-all and the end-all of woman's existence. It is the great lever that moves things, but another quality is required for the settling down.

Greater than all her accomplishments is her capacity for shedding around her wherever she goes the fragrance of a sweet and beautiful life, and smoothing out the raveled sleeve of care. It is in the belief that she is fully capable of this mission that one looks forward in confidence to the immediate future—a future in which the pulse of vibrant life will throb sympathetically and intellectually to the ultimate benefit of the whole of the community.

Thoughts for New Year

"Resolve and resolve and still go on the same?" Nay! Nay! not so; but rather resolve and with a steadfast purpose without equivocation or mental reservation, harness the firm resolution, the will of your intent to the wagon of your purpose loaded with the dutiful obligations of your everyday life. Obligations to home, to business relations, to the proper demand of your church and social environment, to civic and patriotic responsibilities.

Duties never clash; something is paramount, something worth while. Do that! Be true to thyself, to that conception of that self which raises within you a real sense of self-respect; that self which you admire, to which you aspire; that manhood to which you would attain and toward which energies of mind and will bend, never loosing the call of the vision. Before all men honorable—a high sense of honor is a well spring of conscious joy and a reservoir of power to the possessor.

The looking-glass of yourself often may discourage you, but it is the consciousness of what you ought to be, and the desire to attain, laying aside every weight or hindrance and running with patience the race you have set before you. Never stop the cry of your soul, your real self, to the call of the unreached goal.

The poets with their wide and deep discernment ofttimes sing truly of the soul cry and its evolution into an abundant life.

Lowell:

Of all the myriad words of mind
That through the soul come thronging
Which one was e'er so dear, so kind
So beautiful as longing?
The thing we long for that we are
For one transcendent moment
Before the present poor and bare
Can make its sneering comment.

Tennyson:

O for a man to rise in me
That the man that I am
May cease to be.

Holmes:

Build thee more stately mansions O my soul
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple nobler than the last
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast
Till thou at length art free.
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

With every business item and relation be honest, and fundamentally, by word of mouth, truthful. "Ah what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive." A lie seldom travels alone. It weaves a web, in the meshes thereof sooner or later we are humiliated. The truth alone is courageous, and courage is a manly virtue. A lying tongue is the curse of a habit grafted on a cowardly nature. An individual is not honest with himself or honorable in his dealings with his fellow because he is not willing to face the unvarnished fact or bear the brunt and burden which justly is his; a responsibility only made irksome by his cowardly lie whereby he would shift the burden and stand behind the veneer of an assumption or false position. Fear not, the man within you will work out if you will it so; undiscouraged, undismayed, pressing on, you become conscious that, having done your part, it is due to arrive.

Be not discouraged, fellow wayfarer. Yield to that man within you, whose insatiable longing is the inspiration that shall bring the nobler self to being; the self that now chafes at limitations; that opens the windows through which you see the visions of your undying hope, though distant yet existent, and yours to obtain if you will but hold your straight-way course.

Laugh at Your Burden.

Most of us are bending under the burden of some great load. It may be care, it may be disappointment, it may be injustice, it may be physical pain or spiritual discouragement, but it is heavy. Often it seems heavier than we can bear and we cry out and protest. These burdens are very real, but really they are not half as big and heavy as we make them, declares a writer in the Universalist Leader. We have had them upon our shoulders, entirely out of our sight, so long that they have been magnified by imagination or weariness or impatience, until they seem unbearable. Now, then, whatever your burden may be, however long you have been carrying it, and however proud you may have become of your self-imposed martyrdom just take your burden down and look at it honestly, and you will be surprised how it has dwindled away while you have been magnifying it in your mind. Look at it frankly and fearlessly and in nine cases out of ten will your tears be turned to laughter and your sighing into song.

Most Famous City In History.

The one spot which more than any other has controlled the history of Europe lies, strangely enough, not in Europe itself, but in Asia. For the possession of the site where Christ "suffered, was buried and rose again," more blood has been shed than for any other. An immense number of lives were laid down during the Crusades; and for 600 years before the Crusades, and even to the present time, a constant stream of pilgrims has poured into Jerusalem to worship at the spot made sacred by the crucifixion of Christ. From the fourth century after Christ until 50 years ago this site was generally conceded to be within the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. Now two sites dispute the claim of being the actual Golgotha. This latter claimant is known as "Gordon's Calvary," though to an American, Dr. Harlan P. Beach, of Yale university, is due the actual discovery of it, General Gordon, the hero of Khartoum, having first secured for it general recognition.—Christian Herald.

Too Strenuous Plan of Teaching.

"Once upon a time, many years ago," says the Western School Journal, "this editor visited a school in which the teacher in the grammar class tried to illustrate every verb by appropriate actions. Thus the verb run was pictured in a scamper around the schoolroom; the verb strike took form on a boy's back. 'But,' remarked the visitor, 'what are you going to do with the verb lie (to tell an untruth)? You surely wouldn't ask the children to lie, and when the verb howl is in the lesson would you bid them howl?' She had never thought of that, but the absurdity of her method seemed visible to her. We hope so."

MERCY OF THE COURTS

The justice of the peace was in the south and a marked state of ignorance. He was approached by a man desiring a divorce, and he did not know what to do. Calling a friend to his side, he whispered:

"What's the law on this p'int?"

"You can't do it," was the reply. "It's out of your jurisdiction."

The husband, observing the consultation, and feeling keenly his desire to escape from his matrimonial woe, explained:

"I'm willin' to pay well; got the money right here in this sock."

At this the justice assumed his gravest judicial air. Obviously he was deeply pained. Never before in all his life had he been so bowed down by grief.

"You knew before you came here," he said sadly, "that it wasn't for me to separate husband and wife, and yet you not only take up the valuable time of this court by talking, but you actually propose to bribe me with money. Now, how much have you got in that sock?"

"About six dollars and a half, your honor."

"Is that so? Then I fine you five dollars for bribery and a dollar and a half for taking up my time with a case out of my jurisdiction; and may the lord have mercy on your soul!"—The Popular Magazine.

War Balloon Destroyed.

The German paper Schuss and Waffe describes a bullet named for its inventor, Lentz, for which great things are claimed in the way of destroying dirigible balloons, which will undoubtedly appear in the next war between nations of the first rank.

Instead of being a shell fired from a howitzer, like other projectiles of this sort, this bullet can be made up into cartridges for the ordinary rifle.

Two prongs are held in slots in the bullet while it is in the barrel of the rifle, but fly out when it is in the air. When it enters a balloon casing, the strain on these prongs releases a spring, which explodes a primer, setting the gas on fire.

While a dirigible might escape the few shells fired at it by a cannon, it would hardly hope to pass unhit through the hail of bullets fired by a regiment; and one such bullet exploding within its envelope would destroy the balloon, as the unfortunate Wellman balloon exploded last summer.

Dairy Cow at the Head.

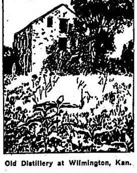
The dairy cow owes a salute to the Country Gentleman for the compliment paid her in saying that "civilization and the dairy cow are closely associated." As a food producer, says the Country Gentleman, the cow returns eighteen pounds for every hundred pounds of feed given her, while her nearest competitor, the hog, returns only fifteen pounds, and the hen, with all her cackling, gives the owner but a scant ten pounds of food in return for his investment of a hundred.

AN OLD KANSAS LANDMARK

Huge Three-Story Distillery Still Stands in County That Is Now Prohibition.

Burlingame, Kan.—Wilmington, in Osage county, Kan., not far from Burlingame, in the late '50's, seemed ideally located for the capitol of Kansas to be. Just on the boundary line of the Sac and Fox Indians, and the Kaws, as it was, proved its security from the menace of the Red Man. For the two tribes were unfriendly, and neither dared molest the white man dwelt between for fear that the depredation of one might be visited upon the other.

In point of scenery, soil and climate, it offered boundless opportunities for growth and progress and ambition.



Old Distillery at Wilmington, Kan.

But Wilmington now is a country road, a dozen or so old stone houses, an inn, fallen into decay—and beyond, a grave yard.

But the oddest landmark of all in these prohibition days is the huge three-story stone distillery, for years used as a granary, but now abandoned.

ZOO HAS 87 NEW SNAKES

South American Jungle Constructed for Rare Fer De Lance in New York.

New York.—A South American jungle in miniature is being constructed at the Bronx zoological gardens for the reception of eighty-seven baby snakes of the rare variety known as Fer de Lance. The entire eighty-seven came to the zoo in a single litter. To insure their surviving in captivity it was necessary to counterfeit the natural conditions of existence in the jungle and thereby entice them to eat properly and take a suitable interest in life.

The Fer de Lance snake is provided with a "food catcher" at the end of its tail. This is a yellow marking which is an exact reproduction of a worm, and the snake can make its tail simulate the movements of a real worm. The young Fer de Lance, to decoy its food, crawls into the high grass, and, coiling up there, lets the tip of its tail protrude a few inches. Patiently it waits until a tree frog or other victim is attracted. The frog grabs the worm and the snake grabs the frog. In a few minutes the frog has disappeared and the snake withdraws its decoy and contentedly goes to sleep for three or four days.

TOO COSTLY FOR THE KING

Stafford House Upkeep Beyond Probable Allowance of Sons of British Ruler.

London.—When the true story of the sale of Stafford House leaks out it will be found that it was not, as some people have been suggesting, the fault of the queen, although her majesty does not at all approve of the idea of letting the Prince of Wales have a separate establishment until he is safely married, that this mansion was not acquired by the king.

The real fact of the matter is that the king received a hint that when the time came to vote an allowance for his sons there would be severe criticism by the labor and the extreme radical members if he suggested a sum large enough to keep up a huge mansion like Stafford house.

The king's financial advisers are urging upon him the advisability of looking for big dowries with all his daughters-in-law. This will be contrary to the precedent of the last few royal marriages. Queen Alexandra had, of course, little money of her own, and the queen still less.

HIT IN EYE, REGAINS VISION

Oklahoma Pastor Sees Again—Due to Missle Shot From Rubber Band.

Oklahoma City.—A bit of tinfoil flipped from a rubber band by a child is declared to have caused the restoration of the eyesight of the Rev. G. G. Rupert, pastor of a local church, who had been blind for 28 years.

The missile fired at random by a grandchild of the minister, hit him in one of the eyes, and to alleviate the pain hot cloths were applied. This occurred several days ago, and when it was apparent that his sight was being restored the applications were continued. Practically normal vision returned.

The Rev. Mr. Rupert became suddenly blind while conducting revival services in Birmingham, O., in 1884.

PARTS OF BIG BIRD FOUND

Professor Granger Gives American Museum Bones From Prehistoric Bird.

New York.—Parts of a giant bird which winged its way over North America 3,000,000 years ago have just been brought to the American Museum of Natural History by Professor Walter Granger, who has been making fossil investigations in Wyoming. The bird, according to Professor Granger, was the largest feathered creature that ever existed in North America.

The creamery men of the state are trying to break the butter trust in the interest of the consumer. Many consumers wish something could be done also to those who will not trust for butter.

On our first page will be found a full and complete explanation of the workings of the parcel post. There is no reason why anyone of our readers should say he does not understand how to mail parcels.

A Washington court has ruled that the man who drinks whisky before breakfast is a habitual drunker. And a Texas newspaper adds that he is a seventy-third degree chump. Which leaves nothing more to be said on the subject.

The idea of the popular election of postmasters has been embodied in an elaborate bill by Senator Bristow. It applies to all offices paying $300 or more a year and calls for a direct primary, the choice of a primary to be binding upon the president.

It appears that the progressive party leaders intend that organization to become permanent and continue to do "business at the old stand." Preparations are being made for a permanent organization and during the next four years a practical organization will undoubtly be effected. It begins to look as if the progressive party may take over the real progressives of both the republican and democratic parties. As to what effect it will have on the democratic party depends in a large measure how satisfactorily Wilson's administration is and with what wing of the democratic party he alligns himself. —Norman County Herald.

Can They Do It

There is an undefined feeling among the adherents of the old line republicans that if the democratic congress to be inaugurated on March 4 makes an effort to reduce the tariff as foreshadowed in the press, a general panic will be the result. It is quite possible that the great banking institutions may so shape affairs that there will be a money stringency in the east; it is a part of their business to pound down the value of securities and to look up the circulating medium to the extent of depriving the small gamblers as compelling them to pay exorbitant rent for the use of the money, but that they can bring on a panic similar to the one they pulled off in 1893 no one believes. The western states of the Union are not as dependent on Wall Street as in ninety-three; we have an abundance of food products, an abundance of the circulating medium, besides the west don't want and will not have a panic despite any and all orders from Wall Street. The object of stringency at this time would be too apparent; the people have been informed and know plenty exists throughout the nation, and that if the money market is restricted they know that it is done for and directly in the interest of the gamblers. A financial panic brought on because of the cutting down of the tariff schedules for the relief of the consumer would be taken at once as the direct means of the manufacturers to fasten upon the public the grinding theft that has existed since '93, to remove which the American voters at the last election cast political preference aside and voted for a leader who had promised relief. We have had enough of soup houses and broken promises; we want genuine relief from the privileged class and it should not be forgotten that the American citizen usually "fights as he votes." Nothing would so please the socialists as a panic brought on by those who have enjoyed special privilege and had been deprived of it—they know the value of such political dodging and justly claim that hard times for a year or two would bring another million to their fold. The time has come in the United States when the political boss and spell-binder has lost control over the voter and no threats or scare head-lines in the daily papers will avail to convince him of his error. Starvation, with a country full of food products, will not avail; the good citizen will work for his bread if a chance is given; be will fight for it if he must. —Cass Lake Times.

The Parcel Post, The Local Merchant and the Country Paper.

The fight against the parcel post, which goes into effect the first of the year, was always waged in the name of the local merchant. The express companies, the many concerns with which the express companies are more or less secretly allied by investment, the railroads, and even the wholesalers and many retailers themselves, all declared that the cheap carriage rates of the parcel post would wipe out the local merchants and leave nothing but big city mail order houses.

None of them stopped to think that if the business of the country merchant is on a basis so insecure that cheap transportation would ruin it, it was bound to die anyway—and should die.

But they did the country merchant less than justice. He gives credit, and the mail order houses don't. His goods are on exhibition for approval, and the mail order purchase is "sight unseen." He knows his customers, and the mail order house doesn't.

On top of these advantages, the local parcel post rates are so much lower than zone rates that the local merchant has a clear advantage in transportation rates.

The trouble with the rural merchant whose business might be injured by the mail order houses is that he is not progressive. Interpreted into more concrete terms, the trouble with him is that he doesn't advertise. True, he sometimes runs a card in the local paper stating that he is in business, and keeps "fine goods," but that isn't advertising. Everybody knows he is in business, and nobody expects him to say anything else than that his goods are "fine." But it doesn't get him anything.

What his possible patrons do not know is that he has bargains as well as the mail order houses. This knowledge he can convey to them only by advertising.

What the country merchant ought to do, parcel post or no parcel post, is to study advertising. Let him study what the city retail merchants do in that line. Let him learn how to do it for himself by copying them. A country merchant could do no better in this territory, for instance, than to study retail advertisements in The Herald. If he does not take The Herald his local newspaper editor probably does, and he will be glad to keep it on file for this use if he is asked to do so.

The country merchant should advertise precisely as the city merchant does. Only in that way can he let his possible patrons know what he has in stock and what bargains he can offer. He can circularize his territory, it is true, but it will cost him more and he can be sure that though every newspaper is read, nine out of ten circulars reach the waste basket immediately. He must advertise, and he must do it exactly as the successful city merchants do. He will find no better school to study advertising methods in than the advertising columns of this newspaper as they are filled by the Duluth merchants.

The country merchant, if he knew it, has a weapon at hand which he can successfully fight the city mail order house, no matter how cheap carriage rates are made. That weapon if his local newspaper.—Duluth Herald.

Successful Sunday Journalism

For years the success of the Sunday magazine of The Record-Herald has incited other papers to try to duplicate or rival it, but nothing else of the kind can compare for a moment with this remarkable supplement. It was the pioneer in its particular field and it seems to have gotten a start that leaves all younger rivals out of the running.

The Sunday magazine of The Record-Herald is a real magazine, full of stories and articles by the best living writers, illustrated by eminent artists superbly printed, and carrying on its cover each week a masterpiece of color work. Both in the beauty of its pictures and in the entertaining quality of its contents it compares favorably with the best of the independent weeklies or even monthlies. During last year its readers have been enjoying a special treat in a remarkable series of prize stories secured through an offer of $10,000 in cash prizes. This unique contest attracted the best living writers, and many of them continue to write for the Sunday Magazine of The Record-Herald. Some of the best stories of Conan Doyle, Jack London, Wallace Irwin, Ellis Parker Butler, Cyrus Townsend Brady and scores of other writers of high-class fiction will be found in its columns. At the same time Sewell Ford's inimitable Shorty McCabe and Torchy stories continue to be frequent features. You will also find one of the best novels of the day running serially in its columns at the present moment.

A sample copy of this excellent magazine will be sent free on request by The Record-Herald, 163 West Washington street, Chicago. It is an easy way to get some good reading.

Election Puzzle Fifth District

The question as to who must represent the Fifth commissioner's district in Pennington county was settled by lot Monday and A. B. Mandt, the defeated candidate in the recent election, won. This closes, for the present at least, an interesting muddle which has cost Pennington county quite a sum.

In the fall primaries the republicans ran two candidates for this place, A. B. Mandt, won out. In the general election the socialists put up George Leimers, and he and Mandt ran with the result that the final vote was a tie. To settle the case County Auditor Fusel referred the whole matter to the office of the attorney general and the latter advised the governor to call a special election. The writs were issued and the special election held and Leimers won with a good majority against Mandt and the other republican candidate, J. L. Larson the present incumbent of the office, who was defeated in the September primary, who entered the special fight by the use of stickers. The county auditor had issued thethe certificate of election to Mr. Leimers, before it was discovered that the special election was not the correct way of settling such a tie, but that it had to be determined by lot in the office of the county auditor, in the presence of both candidates. Notice was served on Messrs. Leimers and Mandt to be present, but Leimers did not attend. The names of the two men were placed in a hat and Miss Effie Hamry, deputy register of deeds, drew, with the result that Mandt won.

It is supposed that the socialist candidate will refuse to abide by this result as he holds the certificate of election and the matter will have to be taken into court. Of the remaining members of the county board two are republicans and two socialist.

Lingering Superstitions.

"Will a lucky gentlewoman give an unlucky one a tiny mascot to bring luck?" runs an advertisement in an English paper. Here was a poor soul—for if there is a creature on the face of the earth whose fate calls for pity it is a gentlewoman who is down—keeping in her poverty some of that superstition or faith, whatever it may be called, which is the only thing that keeps misforune from crushing the sufferer. If only she could get the right charm she might induce fate to look kindly on her! People call this a practical age, but evidences of superstition continue to appear. A lawsuit not long ago revealed the fact that an astrologer kept a motorcar and had a fine house, etc., all of which came out of the proceeds of a zodiacal magazine.

As Exemplified.

Having given his order twenty minutes before and seeing no indications that his dinner was ready, the man with the sparse whiskers beckoned to a waiter.

"My friend," he said, "perhaps I have made a mistake. Is this a pay as you enter restaurant?"

"No, sir," responded the young man in the white apron, yawning. "This is a dinner cooked while you wait restaurant."

Thereupon he resumed his dreamy, contemplative attitude, and the man with the sparse whiskers waited some more.—Chicago Tribune.

A Reply to Gladstone.

"Gladstone had no great scientific knowledge," said an English writer, "and at a dinner, when Faraday described an important new scientific discovery, the premier showed indifference.

"'After all,' he said, hiding a yawn behind his hand, 'what use will it ever be?'

"'Why,' said Faraday, 'there's every probability, sir, that some day you'll be able to tax it.'"

A Turn Down.

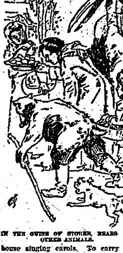
XMAS BIRDS AND BEASTS.

Picturesque Method of Celebrating Yuletide by the Poles.

The legend that the birds and beasts came to worship the infant Jesus has brought about a peculiar and picturesque method of celebrating Christmas among the Poles and other kindred peoples of eastern Europe.

Here men mask in the guise of storks, bears and other animals or birds and go about from house to house singing carols. To carry out the idea these wild birds and savage beasts are led about by keepers.



IN THE GUISE OF STORKS, BEARS AND OTHER ANIMALS.

After the traditional carols are sung the inmates of the house thus honored reward the singers by gifts of cakes, sausages and other dainties. The procession then moves to another house, where the performance is repeated.

A Christmas Eve Sentence.

THERE were four little stockings of four little sizes,
According to common report,
That couldn't escape being (spite of disguises)
Arrested and called into court.

"Now, what have you taken?" With brows that were knitted
This question the magistrate put,
And each little stocking quite boldly admitted,
"Why, I ran away with a foot."

Then the voice of the court shaking window and rafter,
In accents quite tragical rang,
While the children in bed also shook, though with laughter,
"I sentence each stocking to hang!"

Gold In Barnato's Body.

A German paper is responsible for the announcement that Barney Barnato, still more than the legendary king of Peru, who was wont to have his body gilded afresh every morning, deserved the title of El Dorado—the "Man of Gold"—not because of his wealth or of his connection with gold mines, but because his system actually secreted gold. He was, says this credible authority, the victim of a disease called metallitis, his blood being permeated with a powdery gold, as were his eyes, nose, ears and all of his mucous membrane. The pain caused by this condition was so intolerable that it is believed to have been the cause of his suicide

In Silhouetteville.

"Oh, John, don't you wish we could sit here and spoon forever?"

"Yes, dearest. But let's go now. I think I hear the dinner bell!"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Breaking It Gently.

Captain of Steamer—Madam, it gives me great pain to be obliged to tell you that your little boy's hat has blown overboard. Fond Mother—Why, I thought it was tied on with a string! Captain—Yes. That was just the trouble. The string did not break.

It was remarkable in northern Minnesota for automobiles to be driving around the next day after Christmas, Gust Fellman performed that feat.

There were Christmas trees at the M. E. church and Synod church Tuesday evening and at the Swedish Lutheran church on Wednesday evening. All had fine programs and large crowds.

The drama, Tempest and Sunshine, was presented to a full house last evening, and was well worth the price of admission. It was even more interesting to those who had read the story on which it is based. The company is a good one and did their characters justice.

Something will have to be done to check the growth of rowdyism in this place. The exhibition on Christmas day was a disgrace to any civilized community. We venture to predict that unless the officers of the law "get a move on themselves" and do something to control the situation, the people will become so disgusted with present conditions that they will return to the open saloon as the lesser of two evils. It behooves the business men and others interested to urge upon the officers of the law the immediate necessity of their making some little pretense of doing their duty.

WORLD'S CITIES HARD TO KILL.

Rome Twice Burned, Six Times Starved—Paris' Eight Sieges.

Few of the world's great cities have not faced, at one time or another, total destruction. But a city is hard to kill.

Take Rome, for instance. She has been swept by pestilence no fewer than ten times. She has been twice burned and six times driven to submission by starvation. Perhaps it is on account of her great vitality that she is called the Eternal city.

Paris has gone through eight sieges, ten famines, two plagues and one fire which devastated it.

Constantinople has been burned out nine times and has suffered from four plagues and five sieges. In addition, she has been ruled by monarchs who were worse than a plague. Yet Constantinople still flourishes.

London has been decimated five times by plagues, in addition to visitations of typhus, cholera and other epidemics. She has been burned more or less severely several times.—Stray Stories.

Judging from Sample.

I don't think the rich are exceptionally happy.

No? Know many?

Some.

Very rich?

One to five millions!

Oh, but they lead quite a different life from the really rich!

To be sure; but still, don't you think you can tell just as much about the quality of molasses from a hogshead of it as you can from a shipload?—Life.

CAUSED LISTENERS TO SMILE.

Clergyman's Announcement Tickled the Risibilities.

As may be inferred, each profession has its stock jokes—its stories innumerable—each of which having a flavor of its own. That the point of a joke or jest lies not in the tongue of him who makes it, but in the ear that hears, is the testimony of the great dramatist.

The doctor on his rounds and the judge upon the bench have both an audience ready and willing to accept as the highest wit the bon mots of the speakers; and there is no club or gathering of men that does not acclaim one of its members as supreme in this respect, and are ready to yield due recognition of the gift.

It must be admitted that the blunders and jests clerical stand for some reason pre-eminent both in number and in mirth producing qualities. The reason, of course, is not far to seek—the very surroundings in which they occur—the very upsetting of one's preconceived notions of reverence, all tend to cause a reaction in the ordinary mental equilibrium, and the simplest mistake or accident under such circumstances assumes the proportions of a huge comedy.

Recently a divine, in drawing the attention of his congregation to a special communion service on the following Sunday, informed them that, "the Lord is with us in the forenoon and the bishop in the evening."

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

"Ten Pounds," Repeated Ryanne, a Hand in His Pocket.

SYNOPSIS.

George Percival Algernon Jones, vice-president of the Metropolitan Oriental Rug company of New York, thirsting for romance, is in Cairo on a business trip. Horace Ryanne arrives at the hotel in Cairo with a carefully guarded bundle. Ryanne sells Jones the famous holy Yhiordes rug which he admits having stolen from a pasha at Bagdad. Jones meets Major Callahan and late: is introduced to Fortune Chedsoye by a woman to whom he had loaned 150 pounds at Monte Carlo some months previously, and who turns out to be Fortune's mother. Jones takes Mrs. Chedsoye and Fortune to a polo game. Fortune returns to Jones the money borrowed by her mother. Mrs. Chedsoye appears to be engaged in some mysterious enterprise unknown to the daughter. Ryanne interests Jones in the United Romance and Adventure company, a concern which for a price will arrange any kind of an adventure to order. Mrs. Chedsoye, her brother, Major Callahan, Wallace and Ryanne, as the United Romance and Adventure company, plan a risky enterprise involving Jones. Ryanne makes known to Mrs. Chedsoye his intention to marry Fortune. Mrs. Chedsoye declares she will not permit it. Plans are laid to prevent Jones sailing for home. Ryanne steals Jones' letters and cable dispatches. He wires agent in New York, in Jones' name, that he is renting house in New York to some friends. Mahomed, keeper of the holy carpet, is on Ryanne's trail.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

What to do? mused the rogue. On the morrow Mr. Jones would leave for Port Said. Ryanne shook his head and with his cane beat a light tattoo against the side of his shin. Abduction was rather out of his sphere of action. And yet, the suppression of Percival was by all odds the most important move to be made. He had volunteered this service and accomplish it he must, in face of all obstacles, or poof! went the whole droll fabric. For to him it was droll, and never it rose in his mind that he did not chuckle saturninely. It was a kind of nightmare where one hung in mid-air, one's toes just beyond the flaming dragon's jaws. The rewards would be enormous, but these he would gladly surrender for the supreme satisfaction of turning the poisoned arrow in the heart of that canting hypocrite, that smug church-deacon, the sanctimonious, the sleek, the well-fed first-born. And poor Percival Algernon, for no blame of his own, must be taken by the scruff of his neck and thrust bodily into this tangled web of scheme and underscheme. It was infinitely humorous.

He had had a vague plan regarding Mahomed, guardian of the Holy Yhiordes, but it was not possible for him to be in Cairo at this early date. That he would eventually appear Ryanne never doubted. He knew the Oriental mind. Mahomed-El-Gebel would cross every barrier less effective than death. It was a serious matter to the Moslem. If he returned to the palace at Bagdad, minus the rug, it would mean free transportation to the Arabian gulf, bereft of the most important part of his excellent anatomy, his head. Some day, if he lived, Ryanne intended telling the exploit to some clever chap who wrote; it would look rather well in print.

To turn Mahomed against Percival as being the instigator would be an adroit bit of work; and it would rid him of both of them. Gioconda said that she wanted no rough work. How like a woman! Here was a man's game, a desperate one; and Gioconda, not forgetting that it was her inspiration, wanted it handled with gloves! It was bare-hand work, and the sooner she was made to realize this, the better. It was no time for tuning fiddles.

Mahomed out of it, there was a certain English bar in the Quarter Rosetti, a place of dubious repute. Many derelicts drifted there in search of employment still more dubious. Dregs, scum; the bottom and the top of the bottle; outcasts, whose hand and animus were directed against society: black and brown and white men; not soldiers of fortune, like Ryanne, but their camp-followers. In short, it was there (and Ryanne still felt a dull shame of it) that Wallace, carrying the final instructions of the enterprise, had found him, sleeping off the effects of a shabby rout of the night before. It was there also that he had heard of the history and the worth of the Yhiordes rug and the possibility of its theft. He laughed. To have gone upon an adventure like that, with nothing but the fumes of wine in his head!

For a few pieces of gold he might enroll under his shady banner three or four shining lights who would undertake the disposal of Percival. Not that he wished the young man any harm—no; but business was business, and in some way or another he must be made to vanish from the sight and presence of men for at least two months.

As for Major Callahan's unforeseen danger, the devil could look out for that.

Ryanne consulted his watch, a cheap but trustworthy article, costing a dollar, not to be considered as an available asset. He would give it away later in the day; for he had decided that while he was in funds there would be wisdom in the purchase of a fine gold Longines. A good watch, as every one knows, is always as easily converted into cash as a London banknote, providing, of course, one is lucky enough to possess either. Many watches had he left behind, in this place or in that; and often he had exchanged the ticket for a small bottle with a green neck. Wherever fortune had gone against him heavily at cards, there he might find his latest watch.

And another good idea, he mused, as he swung the time-piece into his vest-pocket, would be to add the splendor of a small white stone to his modest scarf. There is only one well-defined precept among the sporting fraternity; when flush, buy jewelry. Not to the cause of vanity, not at all; but precious stones and gold watches constitute a kind of reserve-fund against the evil day. When one has money in the pocket the hand is quick and eager to find it. But jewelry is protected by a certain quality of caution; it is not too readily passed over bars and gaming-tables. While the pawnbroker stands between the passion and the green-baize, there's food for thought.

Having settled these questions to his satisfaction, there remained but one other, how to spend his time. It would be useless to seek the English-Bar before noon. Might as well ramble through the native town and the bazaars. He might pick up some little curio to give to Fortune. So he beckoned to an idle driver, climbed into the carriage, and was driven off as if empires hung upon minutes.

Ryanne never wearied of the bazaars of Cairo. They were to him no less enchanting than the circus-parades of his youth. In certain ways, they were not to be compared with those in Constantinople and Smyrna; but, on the other hand, there was more light, more charm, more color. Perhaps the magic nearness of the desert had something to do with it, the rainless skies, the ever-recurring suggestions of antiquity. His lively observation, his sense of the picturesque and the humorous, always close to the surface, gave him that singular impetus which makes man a prowler. This gift had made possible his success in old Bagdad. Some years before he had prowled through the narrow city streets, had noted the windings, the blind-alleys, and had never forgotten. Faces and localities were written indelibly upon his memory.

One rode to the bazaars, but walked through them or mounted donkeys. Ryanne preferred his own legs. So did Mahomed. Once, so close did he come that he could have put his two brown hands round the infidel's throat. But, patience. Did not the Koran teach patience among the higher laws? Patience. He could not, madly as he had dreamed, throttle the white liar here in the bazaars. That would not bring the Holy Yhiordes to his hands. He must wait. He must plan to lure the man out at night, then to hurry him into the desert. Out into the desert, where no man might be his master. Oh, the Holy Yhiordes should be his again; it was written.

The cries, the shouts, the tower of Babel reclaimed; the intermingling of the races of the world: the Englishman, the American, the German, the Italian, the Frenchman, the Greek, the Levantine, the purple-black Ethiopian, the bronze Nubian; the veiled women, the naked children; all the color-tones known to art, but predominating, that marvelous faded tint of blue, the Cairene blue, in the heavens, in the waters, in the dyes.

"Make way, O my mother!" bawled a donkey-boy to the old crone peddling matches.

"Backsheesh! Backsheesh!" in the eight tones of the human voice. From the beggar, his brother, his uncle, his grandfather, his children and his children's children. "Blacksheesh, backsheesh!"

"To the right!" was shrilled into Ryanne's ear; and he dodged. A troop of donkeys passed, laden with tourists, unhappy, fretful, self-conscious. A water-carrier brushed against him, and he whiffed the fresh dampness of the bulging goat-skin. A woman, the long, black head-veil streaming out behind in the clutch of the monkey-like hand of a toddling child, carried a terra-cotta water-jar upon her head. The grace with which she moved, the abruptness of the color-changes, caught Ryanne's roving eye and filled it with pleasure.

Dust rose and subsided, eddied and settled; beggars blind and one-eyed squatted in it, children tossed it in play, and beasts of burden shuffled through it.

The roar in front of the shops, the pressing and crowding of customers, the high cries of the merchants; the gurgle of the water-pipes, the pleasant fumes of coffee, the hardy loafers lolling before the khans or caravansaries; a veiled face at a lattice-window; the violet shadows in a doorway; the sunshine upon the soaring mosques; a true believer, rocking and mumbling over his tattered Koran; gold and silver and jewels; amber and copper and brass; embroideries and rugs and carpets; and the pest of fleas, the plague of flies, the insidious smells.

Ryanne found himself inspecting "the largest emerald in the world, worth twelve thousand pounds," which looked more like a fine hexagonal of onyx than a gem. It was one of the curiosities of the bazaars, however, and tourists were generally round it in force. To his experienced eye it was no more than a fine specimen of emerald quartz, worth what any fool of a collector was willing to pay for it. From this bazaar he passed on into the next, and there he saw Fortune.

And as Mahomed, always close at hand, saw the hard lines in Ryanne's face soften, the cynical smile become tender, he believed he saw his way to strike.

CHAPTER IX.

The Bitter Fruit.

Fortune had a hearty contempt for persons who ate their breakfast in bed. For her the glory of the day was the fresh fairness of the morning, when every one's step was buoyant, and all life stirred energetically. There was cheer and hope everywhere; men faced their labors with clear eye and feared nothing; women sang at their work. It was only at the close of day that despair and defeat stalked the highways. So she was up with the sun, whether in her own garden or in these odd and mystical cities. Thus she saw the native as he was, not as he later in the day pretended to be, for the benefit of the Feringhi about to be stretched upon the sacrificial stone. She saw, with gladness, the honey-bee thirling the rose, the plowman's share baring the soil; the morning, the morning, the two or three hours that were all, all her own. Her mother was always irritable and petulant in the morning, and her uncle never developed the gift of speech till after luncheon.

She had the same love of prowling that lured Ryanne from the beaten paths. She was not inquisitive but curious, and that ready disarming smile of hers opened many a portal.

She was balancing upon her gloved palm, thoughtfully, a Soudanese head-trinket, a pendant of twisted gold-wires, flawed emeralds and second pearls, really exquisite and not generally to be found outside the expensive shops in the European quarters, and there infrequently. The merchant wanted twenty pounds for it. Fortune shook her head, regretfully. It was far beyond her means. She sighed. Only once in a great while she saw something for which her whole heart cried out. This pendant was one of these.

"I will give you five pounds for it. That is all I have with me."

"Salaam, madame," said the jeweler, reaching for the pendant.

"If you will send it to the Hotel Semiramis this afternoon . . . ." But she faltered at the sight of the merchant's incredulous smile.

"I'll give you ten for it; not a piastre more. I can get one like it in the Sharia Kamel for that amount."

Both Fortune and the merchant turned.

"You, Horace?"

"Yes, my child. And what are you doing here alone, without a dragoman?"

"Oh, I have been through here alone many times. I'm not afraid. Isn't it beautiful? He wants twenty pounds for it, and I cannot afford that."

She had not seen him in many weeks, yet she accepted his sudden appearance without question or surprise. She was used to his turning up at unexpected moments. Of course, she had known that he was in Cairo; where her mother and uncle were this secretive man was generally within calling. There had been a time when she had eagerly plied him with questions, but he had always erected barriers of evasion, and finally she ceased her importunities, for she concluded that her questions were such. No matter to whom she turned, there was no one to answer her questions, questions born of doubt and fear.

"Ten pounds," repeated Ryanne, a hand in his pocket.

The merchant laughed. Here were a young man and his sweetheart. His experience had taught him, and not unwisely, that love is an easy victim, too proud to haggle, too generous to bargain sharply. "Twenty," he reiterated.

"Salaam!" said Ryanne. "Good day!" He drew the somewhat resisting hand of Fortune under his arm and made for the door. "Sh!" he whispered. "Leave it to me." They gained the street.

The merchant was dazed. He had misjudged what he now recognized as an old hand. The two were turning up another street when he ran out, shouting to them and waving the pendant. Ryanne laughed.

"Ten pounds. I am a poor man, effendi, and I need the money. Ten pounds. I am giving it away." The merchant's eyes filled with tears, a trick left to him from out of the ruins of his youth, that ready service to forestall the merited rod.

Ryanne counted out ten sovereigns and put the pendant in Fortune's hand. And the pleasure in his heart was such as he had not known in many days. The merchant wisely hurried back to his shop.

"But . . ." she began protestingly.

"Tut, tut! I have known you since you wore short dresses and tam-o-shanters."

"I really cannot accept it as a gift. Let me borrow the ten pounds."

"And why can't you accept a little gift from me?"

She had no ready answer. She gazed steadily at the dull pearls and the flaky emeralds. She could not ask him where he had got those sovereigns. She could not possibly be so cruel. She could not dissemble in words like her mother. That gold she knew to be a part of a dishonest bargain whose forestep had been a theft—more, a sacrilege. Her honesty was like pure gold, unalloyed, unmixed with sophistic subterfuges. That the young man who had purchased the rug might be mildly peccable had not yet occurred to her.

"Why not, Fortune?" Ryanne was very earnest, and there was a pinch at his heart.

"Because . . ."

"Don't you like me just a little?"

"Why, I do like you, Horace. But I do not like any man well enough to accept expensive gifts from him. I do not wish to hurt you, but it is impossible. The only concession I'll make is to borrow the money."

"Well, then, let it go at that." He was too wise to press her.

"And can you afford to throw away ten pounds?" with assumed lightness. "My one permanent impression of you is the young man who was always forced to borrow car-fare whenever he returned from Monte Carlo."

"A fool and his money. But I'm a rich man now," he volunteered. And briefly he sketched the exploit of the Yhiordes rug.

"It was very brave of you. But has it ever occurred to you that it wasn't honest?"

"Honest?" frankly astonished that she should question the ethics. "Oh, I say, Fortune; you don't call it dishonest to get the best of a pagan! Aren't they always getting the best of us?"

"If you had bargained with him and beaten him down, it would have been different. But, Horace, you stole it; you admit that you did."

"I took my life in my hands. I think that evened up things."

"No. And you sold it to Mr. Jones?"

"Yes, and Mr. Jones was only too glad to buy it. I told him the facts. He wasn't particularly eager to bring up the ethics of the case. Why, child, what the deuce is a Turk? I shouldn't cry out if some one stole my Bible."

"Good gracious! do you carry one?"

"Well, there's always one on the room-stand in the hotels I patronize."

"I suppose it all depends upon how we look at things."

"That's it. A different pair of spectacles for every pair of eyes."

If only he weren't in love with her! thought the girl. He would then be an amusing comrade. But whenever he met her he quietly pressed his suit. He had never spoken openly of love, for which she was grateful, but his attentions, his little kindnesses, his unobtrusive protection when those other men were at the villa, made the reading between the lines no difficult matter.

"What shall you do if this Mahomed you speak of comes?"

"Turn him loose upon our friend Jones," with a laugh.

"And what will he do to him?"

"Carry him off to Bagdad and chop off his head," Ryanne jested.

"Tell me, is there any possibility of Mr. Jones coming to harm?"

"Can't say." Her concern for Percival annoyed him.

"Is it fair, when he paid you generously?"

He did not look into the grave eyes. They were the only pair that ever disconcerted him. "My dear Fortune, it's a question which is the more valuable to me, my skin or Percival's."

"It isn't fair."

"From my point of view it's fair enough. I warned him; I told him the necessary facts, the eventual dangers. He accepted them all with the Yhiordes. I see nothing unfair in the deal, since I risked my life in the first place."

"And why must you do these desperate things?"

"Oh, I love excitement. My one idea in life is to avoid the humdrum."

"Is it necessary to risk your life for these excitements? Is your life nothing more to you than something to experiment with?"

"Truth, sometimes I don't know, Fortune. Sometimes I don't care. When one has gambled for big stakes, it is hard to play for penny points."

"A strong, healthy man like you ought not to court death."

"I do not seek it. My only temptation is to see how near I can get to the Man in the Shroud, as some poet calls it, without being touched. I'll make you my confessor. You see, it is like this. A number of wearied men recently formed a company whereby monotony became an obsolete word in our vocabulary. You must not think I'm jesting; I'm serious enough. This company ferrets out adventures and romances and sells them to men of spirit. I became a member, and the trip to Bagdad is the result. One never has to share with the company. The rewards are all yours. All one has to do is to pay a lump sum down for the adventure furnished. You work out the end yourself, unhindered and unassisted."

"Are you really serious?"

"Never more so. Now, Percival Algernon has always been wanting an adventure, but the practical side of him has made him hold aloof. I told him about this concern, and he refuses to believe in it. So I am going to undertake to prove it to him. This is confidential. You will say nothing, I know."

"He will come to no harm physically?"

"Lord, no! It will be mild and innocuous. Of course, if any one told him that an adventure was toward for his especial benefit, it would spoil all. I can rely upon your silence?"

She was silent. He witnessed her indecision with distrust. Perhaps he had said too much.

"Won't you promise? Haven't I always been kind to you, Fortune, times when you most needed kindness?"

"I promise to say nothing. But if any harm comes to that young man, either in jest or in earnest, I will never speak to you again."

"I see that, after getting Percival Algernon into an adventure, I've got to cicerone him safely out of it. Well, I accept the responsibility." Some days later he was going to recall this assurance.

"Sometimes I wonder . . ." pensively.

"Wonder about what?"

"What manner of man you are."

"I should have been a great deal better man had I met you ten years ago."

"What? When I was eleven?" with a levity intended to steer him away from this channel.

"You know what I mean," he answered, moody and dejected.

She opened her purse and dropped the pendant into it, but did not speak.

Bell of Tragic Memories

Has Remarkable History That Will Strike the Reader as Being Typically Russian.

The Kamaoulle Koloko, or "Bell With the Ear Torn Off," had a most romantic history. In the sixteenth century Prince Dimitri, the rightful heir to the Russian throne, was deposed by a revolt led by Boris Godunoff, who was afterward proclaimed czar. The seat of government was then at Uglich and thither Dimitri was sent, in order that he might remain under the direct observation of the usurper.

Boris, fearing that the populace might awake to the justice of the claims of the young prince, planned the assassination of Dimitri. He was one day stabbed in a courtyard. None of the bystanders showed any disposition to aid him. A priest, however, from the cathedral belfry, saw the crime and immediately began tolling the great bell, which was held sacred and rung only on unusual occasions, such as at a coronation or the death of a czar.

Furious at this tacit expression of reproach, the czar commanded that the priest should be tortured and executed and that the bell should be taken down and placed beside the body of its ringer. This order was fulfilled, and the bell was beaten with clubs by the entire populace, the Czar Boris being at their head.

The czar then decreed that the bell should be exiled to Tobolsk and that one of its hangers be removed to indicate its disgrace.—Harper's Weekly.

Luminous Metal Discovered.

For generations the peasants of Cornwall have handed down a legend that at night there may be seen a faintly luminous metal among the rocks brought from the mines of the county. A British scientist has proved that this story is by no means based on imagination. A specimen of the mineral autunite, which is also found in Wales, was sent to him from Portugal because of its shining character. He finds that it closely resembles artificially prepared salts of uranium, and that its luminosity is due to spontaneous radio-activity. The light it sheds is stronger than that of nitrate of uranium. Upon parting with its water of crystallization the metal loses its luminosity.

Destroying Weeds in Ponds.

Copper sulphate is often used for destroying the scum-like weeds in ponds. But precautions must be taken, for unless the right proportion of sulphate is used any fish which may be in the pond will be injured. The proportion of copper sulphate used in the ponds at Kew Gardens is one part to from 750,000 to 1,000,000 parts of water. Sulphate of copper in a pulverized state is placed in a porous bag and dragged through the water until dissolved. The water in St. James's Park, London, it might be mentioned, has for two summers been kept free from scum by this method.—London Mail.

CANADA WEEK IN CHICAGO

CANADIAN EXHIBITS AT LIVE STOCK AND LAND SHOWS CENTER OF ATTRACTION.

The hats were doffed to Canada during the two weeks of the Land Show and the week of the Live Stock Show at Chicago. Willing to display its goods, anxious to let the people of the central states know what could be produced on Canadian farm lands, and the quality of the article, Hon. Dr. Roche, minister of the interior of Canada, directed that sufficient space be secured at the United States Land Show, recently held, to give some adequate idea of the field resources of western Canada. Those in charge had splendid location, and installed one of the most attractive grain and grass exhibits ever seen anywhere. Thousands, anxious to get "back to the land," saw the exhibit, saw wheat that weighed 68 pounds to the measured bushel, oats that went 48 and barley that tipped the scales at 55 pounds. The clover, the alfalfa, the wild pea vine and vetch, the rye grass, the red-top and many other succulent and nutritious varieties of wild grasses demanded and deserved from their prominence and quality the attention they received. The grain in the straw, bright in color, and carrying heads that gave evidence of the truth of the statements of Mr. W. J. White of Ottawa, and his attendants, that the wheat would average 28 to 35 bushels and over per acre, the oats 55 to 105 bushels, the flax 12 to 28 bushels, were strongly in evidence, and arranged with artistic taste on the walls. The vegetable exhibit was a surprise to the visitors. Potatoes, turnips, cabbage—in fact, all of it proved that not only in grains was western Canada prominent, but in vegetables it could successfully compete with the world.

One of the unique and successful features of the exhibit was the successful and systematic daily distribution of bread made from Canadian flour. It was a treat to those who got it. Canadian butter, Canadian cheese and Canadian honey helped to complete an exhibit that revealed in a splendid way the great resources of a country in which so many Americans have made their home.

A feature of the exhibit was the placards, announcing the several recent successes of Canadian farm produce and live stock in strong competition with exhibits from other countries. There was posted the Leager Wheeler championship prize for Marquis wheat grown at Rosthern in 1911, beating the world. Then L Holmes of Cardston entered the competitive field at Lethbridge Dry Farming Congress, and won the wheat championship of 1912, beating Mr. Wheeler with the same variety of wheat. Hill & Sons of Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, in 1911, won the Colorado silver trophy for best oats grown, competed for in a big competition at Columbus, Ohio, in 1911. The produce of British Columbia at the New York Land Show in 1911 carried off the world's championship for potatoes, and incidentally won a $1,000 silver trophy, and then, but a few days ago, the same province carried off the world's prize for apples at the Horticultural Show in London, England.

But that was not all. These Canadians, who had the termerity to state that corn was not the only feed for finishing high-grade beef cattle, entered for the fat steer championship at the Live Stock Show in Chicago a polled Angus—"Glencarnock Victor." Nearly 300 entries were in the field. "Glencarnock Victor" didn't know a kernel of corn from a Brazilian walnut. There were Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, Wisconsin and their corn-fed article, determined to win, bound to beat this black animal from the north, and his "nothing but prairie grass, oats and barley feed," as his owner proudly stated, but they didn't. Canada and McGregor & Sons, with their "Glencarnock Victor," won, and today the swelldom of America is eating of his steaks and roasts—the champion steer of the world.

But once more the herd of cattle that won the Sweepstakes at the same show was bred and owned by the owners of "Glencarnock Victor," fed only on prairie grass, oats and barley, near Brandon, Manitoba. The royal reception given to Mr. McGregor on his return to his home town was well deserved.

Omission must not be made of the wonderful and beautiful display of apples made by British Columbia, occupying a full half section of the great Land Show. This was in personal charge of Mr. W. B. Scott, deputy minister of agriculture for that province, who was not only a host to those who visited the exhibit, but was also an encyclopedia of information regarding the resources of that country. With 200,000 Americans going to western Canada this year, it is pleasing to know that so many from this side of the line can participate in the honors coming to that new country.—Advertisement.

This Is a Bird of a Story.

The pigeons of the stock exchange are very much disturbed these days while workmen are removing a coat of gloom from the famous frieze near their residence. Much of their time they spend flying to the windows of J. P. Morgan's office across the street. Yesterday at noon James J. Hill and A. Barton Hepburn noticed them.

"Pigeons are active today," said Mr. Hepburn.

"Pigeons!" said Hill. "They're not pigeons, they're ravens bringing Morgan his dinner."—New York World.

Sent Their Best Regards.

Truth gives the following account of "a voice" in the suffrage debate on home rule in the house of commons:

"What message," barked Lord Robert Cecil, with flashing eye and menacing finger, "am I to take to the woman's suffrage meeting from the house of commons?" "Give them our kind regards," was the retort, the promptity of which completely [illegible] the wind out of the sails of his [illegible] eloquence.

PLEASANT TIME IN PROSPECT

Bachelor Brother Now Knows Something of the Duties That Fall to the Young Mother.

"I was visiting my married sister in Toledo last week," relates "Buck" Hawes. "She's got a three-year-old kid, and, while I am fairly fond of children, I am a bachelor and somewhat sot in my ways. I was rather dismayed; therefore, when my sister proposed leaving me in the house with the child one afternoon. And here's what she said:

"'Don't put yourself to a bit of trouble—he can take care of himself. See that he doesn't climb up to the pantry shelves and keep an eye on him so that he won't get into any mischief. He won't annoy you. Don't let him go down cellar and watch that he doesn't get hold of the books in the library, and he'll amuse himself all right. If he cries, give him a cooky, and if that doesn't stop him, ride him on your back. But don't let him bother you a bit. I'll be home in an hour!'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

RINGWORM ON CHILD'S FACE

Stratford, Iowa.—"Three years ago this winter my seven-year-old son had ringworm on the face. First it was in small red spots which had a rough crust on the top. When they started they looked like little red dots and then they got bigger, about the size of a bird's egg. They had a white rough ring around them, and grew continually worse and soon spread over his face and legs. The child suffered terrible itching and burning, so that he could not sleep nights. He scratched them and they looked fearful. He was cross when he had them. We used several bottles of liniment, but nothing helped.

"I saw where a child had a rash on the face and was cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment and I decided to use them. I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment about one month, and they cured my child completely." (Signed) Mrs. Barbara Prim, Jan. 30, 1912.

AGE FOR BREEDING HEIFERS

Opinions on Constantly Recurring Question Differ Considerably—Develop Long Milkers.

The age at which to breed the heifers is a constantly recurring question. Opinions differ considerably on this poiont, and unfortunately experience as related by breeders is not uniform by any means, writes E. E. Kaufman in The Town and Country Journal.

The writer has always tried to make his opinions conform to the experience and observation, but in the case of breeding heifers his views have always been backed up by both experience and observation.

A Well-Bred Animal.

When the heifer is bred to drop the first calf at the age of two years, and in nearly all instances this can be done, the habit of giving milk is early stimulated, besides the young cow is more tractable, and thus more readily brought under the environment of her new condition. With the first calf dropped at the age of two years it is better to delay the breeding of the second calf for six or eight months, but keep milking her for a year at least, in order to develop the trait of long and persistent milking. After the second calf she can be bred regularly every year.

If properly fed and handled there is really no danger of stunting the growth or undermining the constitution by early breeding. For the dairy cow should begin giving milk as early in life as possible, and the habit of persistent milking be thoroughly instilled in the animal. A heifer bred to calve at 2½ or 3 years of age will be more difficult to handle, and consequently not give down her milk so readily, thus bringing about a tendency to shorten the milking period when all efforts should be in the line of a long period of lactation. Breed the heifers young, 14 to 15 months, except, possibly, in special cases.

SUCCESS DEPENDS ON FEED

Cows Must Be Given Both Protein and Carbonaceous Rations in Order to Do Well.

Success in milk and butter dairying depends largely on the feed of the cow in properly balanced rations. Cows must have both protein and carbonaceous foods to do well, and these can readily be selected in due proportion.

The protein foods are alfalfa, clover, cowpea hay, bran, cornmeal, cottonseed meal and soy beans.

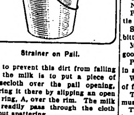
The carbonaceous foods are corn and cornmeal, corn silage, timothy hay, corn fodder, carrots, sugar beets and other beets. A good balanced ration may be made of alfalfa or clover hay, silage, corn or cornmeal.

These can be fed in balanced quantity, and the dairyman will very soon see the quantity required after feeding a short time. Thirty-five to forty pounds of corn per day, according to the size of the cow, are enough.

STRAINER FOR A MILK PAIL.

Cheesecloth Placed Over Opening Prevents Dirt of Any Kind From Getting Into Milk.

Even though a milker may be careful, small particles of dirt, hairs, etc., will fall into the milk pail. It is true that the milk is strained afterward, but a large percentage of the dirt dissolves and passes through the strainer along with the milk, writes W. A. Jaquythe of Richmond, Cal., in the Popular Mechanics. The best plan to prevent this dirt from falling into the milk is to put a piece of cheesecloth over the pail opening, securing it there by slipping an open wire ring, A, over the rim. The milk will readily pass through the cloth without spattering.



Strainer on Pail.

Silage for Cows.

Silage furnishes a succulent feed during any time of the year. This is of special value in connection with a herd of dairy cows. During the winter and during late summer, when flies are bad, weather hot and pastures are bare, cows shrink in their milk and young stock lose in flesh. Silage is of inestimable value during these times.

The Dairy Cow.

The true value of a dairy cow is fixed on the amount of butter fat in her milk and what it costs to produce it.

FEEDING THE HEAVY MILKER

Large Producers More Than Balance Added Cost, According to Theory of Prof. F. W. Woll.

Some people are apt to claim that great milkers require feeding the cost of which more than balances the added value of their produce. Those who have this notion should consider the statement made by Prof. F. W. Woll in his address before the Western Guernsey Cattle Breeders' association, who brought up the following figures:

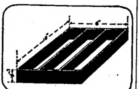
At the close of the Wisconsin cow competition, the Holstein cow, Caroline Paul Parthenia, was accorded the honor of being the largest producer of butter fat. The feed eaten during the year by this cow at market prices was valued at $129.50, while the feed eaten by the lowest producer was $48.32, but as Mr. Woll says:

"The production of butter fat and skim milk at fair values would bring for the poorest cow $68.24 and for the best cow $283.24. If we subtract the cost of the feed from the value of the products, we get what may be termed net returns, amounting to $9.92 for the low producer and $154.44 for the record cow. This, therefore, is the situation: The best cow produced over 300 per cent. more butter fat than the poorest cow; her feed cost 168 per cent. more, but she gave 675 per cent. larger returns."

MACHINE AND HAND MILKING

Flow of Milk Not Appreciably Decreased by Use of Modern Devices—Cheaper and Cleaner.

From experiments with milking machines conducted for nine years by the agricultural experiment farm of New South Wales, it was found that the flow of milk is not appreciably decreased when machine milking is substitutetd for hand milking, except in isolated cases, and that the period of lactation is not shortened or subsequent periods of lactation adversely affected in any way. Cows that had been milked by machine continuously for five years apparently did not decrease in the annual yield of milk. The percentage of solids in the milk remained the same as with hand milking, and the cows were no more subject to udder troubles. Machine milking was much cheaper and cleaner when the machines were properly cared for and run by a capable operator.



Metal Pail Rest.

The illustration shows a metal frame on which milk pails can be placed while in the stable to keep them out of the dirt.

Quality Not Accidental.

Quality in a cow is not usually accidental, but is produced by care in selection, feeding and general management. Uniformly certain results being obtained by this plan, it looks as if it were more profitable, as well as preferable, to raise your cows.

If one is going to raise the heifer calves haphazard, he may just as well go to the market and buy "sight unseen." But the man who remembers and appreciates ancestry, feed, training and development, may reasonably anticipate a satisfactory pregeny from a good, capable cow and a thoroughbred sire of the breed you want

The Farmers' Circle.

If you wish to prosper get into the farmers' endless circle as soon as you can. Here it is: Better feeding followed by better manuring, followed by better crops, which make possible still better feeding and more stock, followed by still heavier manuring and still larger crops, and so on. The first arc of the circle is to feed better, but high feeding only pay with good stock. Therefore begin with good milking stock.

Feeding the Milkmaker.

It must be kept in mind that the cow is like a cupboard—you must put something into her before you can take anything out. The best cow in the world cannot make milk without plenty of the right kind of feed. The same is true of the average or poor cow. Large consumption of feed is the ideal condition of the dairy cow. In most instances the large consumer is a profitable milker.

DAIRY NOTES

Poor cows are never clean.

Use vaseline for sore teats.

No dairy was ever too clean.

Pet the heifer calf and raise a gentle cow.

Slow ripening of cream produces a bitter flavor.

Many a common cow can be made good with more food.

Properly managed, dairying brings in a constant income.

With calves, too low a temperature of feed causes scours.

The cow that gives much milk must have plenty to drink.

The best way to keep cows clean is to use plenty of bedding.

A coat of whitewash will do much to brighten up the cow stable.

A poor milker is one of the surest means of diminishing a milk flow.

The churnability of cream depends largely on its being ripened evenly.

System in the dairy should supersede all other matters on the farm.

What a feeling of satisfaction and security a silo full of green feed inspires.

Nearly every herd can be made to double its production by selection and care.

Vitality is a very important characteristic in the dairy cow or any other farm animal.

Fashion's Fancies

MANY WINTER FABRICS

TROUBLE REALLY IS IN MAKING ONE'S SELECTION.

Description of Some of the Most Popular Materials May Help Some One Who Is Still Undecided as to Choice.

So many different fabrics are "on the market" suing for favor that it were convenient at least for buyers to know one from t'other. It would be disappointing to rush in for a bargain in armure and find that you really thought it to be bengaline.

Armure is a weave that produces a fine pebbled surface.

Bengaline is a silk fabric that has thick threads or cords at intervals from selvage to selvage. Frequently the cord is of wool covered with silk and in this season the two-tone effects are popular.

Beige is a fine fabric woven of threads of two different colors. These two are twisted together, giving an uncertain effect in the light, although the general coloring is a monotone. Beige is also the color of natural wool.

Camel's hair is a loose woolen fabric with long hairs.

Bourette is a rough effect gained by introducing lumpy, knotted yarns at intervals in the weaving.

Challis, either cotton, wool or a mixture of these two, is a light weight fabric, usually printed.

Mohair is a lustrous fabric, light in weight and dust shedding, made from the hair of the Angora goat.

Tulle is a fine silk netlike maline, made from the silk of the wild silkworm that feeds on oak leaves. When pongee and shantung are heavy and coarsely woven they are called tussah.

Melton is a smooth, stout woolen cloth like broadcloth, only heavier. It is suitable for tailored costumes.

Ladies' cloth is a fabric for tailored suits and long wraps similar to flannel in construction, but with a high finish on the surface which gives a broadcloth effect.

Terry cloth is a weave with a looped effect. It is a velvet in which the loops of the pile have not been cut. The name is frequently applied to cotton fabrics of the type of agaric and sponge cloth.

Sicilian cloth, or sicilienne, is mohair of heavy weight.

Cravenette is not a fabric, but a process. It is a waterproofing process applied to any material, either silk, wool or cotton.

Raye means striped.

Tulle is a fine silk netlike maline. The French apply the same name to blonde or cotton net.

Panne is a light weight velvet with the pile "laid" or flattened.

Oxford was originally a wool fabric in dark gray and white mixtures. Of late years heavy cotton and linen fabrics have been known by this name.

Granite is a weave in which the yarns are so twisted as to create a pebbled surface.

PRETTY COAT FOR WINTER

The Indian blanket coat is the latest for the lady's wear for winter sports, especially coming in handy for skating. Its length reaches only a little below the knees. The material is of a soft wool of various colors on a tan background with markings of brown and dull green. The hat is of tan felt and trimmed with green wings to suggest the Indian head dress.

Vivid Colors in Vogue.

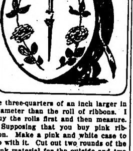
India seems to be responsible for the vivid colors which are in vogue in England. Purple, green and bright blue are very popular, but red is the favorite, red in all its shades from cerise to the brick-like tone known as carrots. And here the English woman scores over her French sister, for her rosy complexion can stand the most vivid shades of red, while the French woman generally avoids this color.

CASE FOR KEEPING RIBBONS

Cardboard Covered to Denote the Various Shades Is the Foundation of the Article.

I make my cases to hold two rolls of baby ribbon, but, of course, they can be made to hold as many as one likes.

First I cut out four rounds of cardboard, white, especially if a light shade of material is to be used as a covering for it. These rounds should be three-quarters of an inch larger in diameter than the roll of ribbons. I buy the rolls first and then measure.



Supposing that you buy pink ribbon. Make a pink and white case to go with it. Cut out two rounds of the pink material for the outside and two of the white for the lining, allowing a good half-inch of the material everywhere to turn over the edge.

Cover two rounds of cardboard with white and two with the pink material, then overcast a white and a pink together (the, bare sides of the cardboards, of course, being on the outside), when you will have two completely covered rounds.

If a brocaded material is used it will not need to be embroidered, but with a plain material a small spray of flowers and leaves worked on the pink material before it is attached to the cardboard is a great improvement.

A fine pink cord sewn on to the edge of the case makes a neat finish, and I sometimes put a narrow frill of lace—Boston Globe.

For the Little Folks.

Some of the newest suit designs for the small boy show sashes in a contrasting shade from that chosen for the little garments.

Fur coats promise to be very fashionable this winter in tiny fashionland. Some of these models are decidedly original in cut.

Scotch plaids fashion many of the latest children's school frocks. In fact, plaids for making and trimming dresses for the little folks.

Sueded Collar Set.

In every color, but particularly in gray and in vivid scarlet collar, cuff and belt sets are being produced. The material used is suede and the collar and cuffs are of the old-world Roundhead pattern.

The collar turns down and the cuffs turn up, while the belt is straight and excessively neat. To be worn with the country tweed or serge suit the new sets are admirably adapted.

FAN FADS WORTH COPYING

Handsome Indeed Are Those Which Parisian Women Have Adopted as the Mode for the Season.

As in many other dainty feminine accessories, it is Paris which sends us the prettiest fans. Bewitching little trifles they are, delicate and lovely.

One of the new ideas is to have the fan made with flower-like petals of gauze or chiffon, partially covered with tinsel or remaissance lace. When the materials used are filmy enough, and the sticks of carved ivory or pearl, it is easy to imagine just how pretty such fans are.

Sometimes on the feather fans you will see little butterflies in color, cleverly made from the feathers, and ornamenting the part just above the sticks. And sometimes the butterflies are replaced by small rosebuds in shell pink, or festoons or chenille in round balls.

Very handsome are the fans of chiffon cloth, with hand-painted decorations. There are pastoral scenes in color, and they remind us of the beautiful old French fans of long ago. Frequently these have sticks of the lustrous mother-of-pearl, a fitting finish to the gauze-like tops.

Fashion's Fancies

When the tailored suits are trimmed with fur, very wide, soft muffs are carried to match the fur trimming of the suit.

Some of the new effective flouncings are of linen, and they show floral patterns in blind work, with an occasional lace medallion.

Some of the newest suit designs for the small boy show silk sashes in a contrasting shade from that chosen for the little garments.

Many of the new velveteens are checked, while the curduroys have a chinchilla cord, and others, tweed diagonal or cotele effects.

Extremely becoming are the soft velvet or plush hats to the girlish face. They have no inside frame and are trimmed with fur, ribbon fancies or ribbon flowers.

Baking Made Almost Automatic

Science has done many wonderful things in the way of lightening kitchen-work, but possibly the most welcome of its many achievements is the prepartion of a baking powder that makes baking almost automatic.

This wonderful baking powder is known as Calumet Baking Powder.

As you perhaps know from your own experience—baking is largely a matter of "luck." If your baking powder happens to be just right, your baking will be good. But if it varies in quality or in strength—as so many baking powders do, your bakings are more than likely to be ruined.

Calumet Baking Powder puts a stop to the dependence on "luck." With it, all quickly-raised foods can be made without the slightest trouble—made pure and wholesome and tasty. For Calumet itself is pure in the can and in the baking—and so uniform in quality, so carefully prepared, that failures are impossible. You can judge of its purity, too, when you know that it has been given the highest awards at two World's Pure Food Expositions—one at Chicago in 1907 and the other at Paris, France, last March. Adv.

A young girl, over her queer alligator pear salad, mentioned the name of a Princeton sophomore who had played rather badly on his class team.

"He is an awfully nice boy," she said "What was it he played on the eleven, Mr. Baker—halfback, quarterback, fullback?"

The handsome and herculean "Hobey" smiled.

"I think he played drawback," he said.

Lover's Unique Devotion.

An unusual manner in which a lover's devotion was shown occurred at Zurich, Switzerland, recently. A cobbler, whose sweetheart died, apprenticed himself to a stone-cutter in order to execute a fitting tribute to her memory, and after fourteen months he was able to carve a beautiful rose on a marble slab and write beneath: "Such was She." After it had been erected over her grave he returned to his first trade, and now repairs shoes as before.

His Santanic majesty grins when he hears a man say he will reform—tomorrow.

It takes a smart man to conceal his ignorance.

HOW PARCEL POST RATES ARE FIXED

BIG ENTERPRISE LAUNCHED

Eleven Pounds Is the Limit in Weight for a Single Package—Anything That Will Not Injure Other Mail Can Be Sent.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

With the coming of the New Year the United States government will enter into a new field of enterprise—the transmittal of merchandise by what is known as the parcel post. For years there has been a demand for such a system of inexpensive transmittal of packages. The camps of favor and disfavor of the parcel post scheme have been about equally divided. Finally at the last session of congress a bill was passed which will put the plan into operation, but only it must be said in little more than an experimental way.

It is the intention of Uncle Sam to move rather slowly in the parcel post matter. He wants to find how popular it will be, how much it will cost the government, and whether there is to be a profit or loss at the end of each year. If it is found that the plan is successful from the point of view of the people, which means the government also, the parcel post will be extended until finally it reaches the proportions which its proponents say they believe it is destined to assume.

Zone System Explained.

It is no exaggeration to say that thousands upon thousands of inquiries have been made of the postmaster general as to just what the parcel post will mean to the people. It was the law of congress establishing the system which made provision for a division of the country into zones and into 35,000 units which are to be used as centers in describing the circles which mark the boundaries of the zones. There has been no clear understanding, apparently, of this zone system, but really it is a very simple matter.

The accompanying map shows the country divided into zones from the unit in which Washington is situated, as the center. Accompanying the map is a table showing the rate of postage per pound for parcels from Washington to places within all the zones.

Each unit contains an area thirty miles square. Now each unit is a center from which the zones are drawn and so every unit in the country no matter where it is situated will have zones drawn from it just exactly as Washington has them drawn from it. For instance, take Keokuk, Ia., which is in a unit in the fifth zone. From that will be drawn circles exactly as they are drawn from Washington and they will be numbered from Keokuk as number one, just as they are numbered from Washington as number one. Of course, however, Zone Six will have a different geographical position as related to Keokuk than it has as related to Washington, but as the radius of the circles drawn from Keokuk is the same length as the radius of the circles drawn from Washington, Keokuk's Zone Six will be just as far from its center as Washington's Zone Six is.

How Rates Are Fixed.

It can be seen from this readily enough that the postal rates from Washington to its particular zone will be the same as the postal rates from Keokuk to its particular zones. Each unit being about thirty miles square will of course contain in most cases a number of postoffices, but each office in the same unit is considered as being the center of the circles from which the zones are drawn. The rates of postage are fixed from the unit in which the sending postoffice is situated, but the price to every place in any zone is just the same. To illustrate, it will cost exactly the same amount to send a parcel from Washington to Erie, Pa., that it costs to send it to Atlanta, Ga., because Erie and Atlanta with reference to Washington are situated in the fourth zone. The rates therefore are fixed from the unit in which the postoffice is located, but they are the same from that office to any point in any one zone.

It will be seen by reference to the table of rates of postage that it will cost more per pound to send a package a long distance than it does to send it a short distance. The rate increases for a package weighing one pound at the rate of one cent for each zone. No package weighing more than 11 pounds can be sent under the new parcel post law. It should be said right here that on the long hauls the parcel post may not be able to compete with the express companies, but that on shorter hauls it can so compete. It was the expressed desire of the legislators and of the postoffice officials that the parcel post system should be made of particular use to persons having farm and factory products to transmit to customers. It is probable that producers must study the rates of postage and the convenience of transmittal and compare them with the cost and convenience under present methods before individually a man can determine whether he is to profit or not by the change. Then there is another thing to be considered and which only can be known definitely when fuller regulations have been made to specify exactly what kind of things can be sent by parcel post. It can be said in a general way that anything can be sent which is properly wrapped and which will not injure other mail matter with which it may come in contact.

Copy Foreign Countries.

It is probable that the government will adopt a means of transportation for certain kinds of its merchandise much like those which have been adopted in parcel post countries abroad. What the English call hampers, basket-like arrangements, probably will be adopted, and as these can be kept separate from the ordinary mail matter it is believed that the regulations as finally adopted will allow the sending of eggs, butter, dressed poultry, live poultry, honey, fruit, and other products of the country.

The 11-pound limit for a single package may work at first against any very extended use of the parcel post for some of the articles which have been named. Of course, more weight can be sent if it is sent in different parcels, but the cost in that case would be heavier because the increase per pound on a single package is not great up to 11 pounds, and probably it would increase at no greater rate if the government were to raise the limit of weight which is now fixed. To make it simpler, it will cost more to send two packages of 11 pounds than it would to send one package of 22 pounds if the government eventually should allow a heavier single package to be carried and should charge in proportion just what it does now for one package of 11 pounds weight.

Every postmaster in the United States will have a parcel post map like the one which is here reproduced except that the zone lines will be shown with the unit of his postoffice as a center. All that a postmaster will have to do when a parcel is presented for transportation is to find out in what zone the destination of the package lies. His table will show him instantly the rate per pound from the unit in which his postoffice lies to the zone of the package's destinations, the price as has been explained before, to every postoffice in any one zone being the same. The parcel post will take nothing but fourth-class matter. Printed matter is still in the third-class designation. Therefore books cannot be sent by the parcel post system. This the postoffice authorities seem to think is in a way unjust and may work a hardship. It may be that in the future the law will be changed so as to include all printed matter. It seems to be certain that an attempt will be made to bring about this change as speedily as possible.

Postmaster General Hitchcock has ordered that postmasters be advised that parcel post packages cannot be accepted for mailing unless they bear a distinctive parcel post stamp and have attached to them the return card of the sender. A series of distinctive stamps is now in course of preparation for this class of mail as required by the law creating the parcel post system. Consignments of these stamps will be ready for shipment to all postoffices in ample time for the establishment of the new system on New Year's day.

The postoffice department has given instruction to every postmaster in the country to enlighten his patrons as much as possible on the general subject of the parcel post and especially on the use of the special stamps and the necessary attachment of the return card. The law requires that all fourth-class matter mailed after January 1, 1913, without parcel post stamps attached shall be treated as "Held for postage" matter. Parcel post packages will be mailable only at postoffices, branch postoffices, lettered and local named stations, and such numbered stations as may be designated by the postmasters.

Rate on Seeds Not Affected.

It should be said that the act of congress which puts a parcel post plan into operation does not in any way affect the postage rate on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions and plants as fixed by section 482 of the postal laws and regulations.

The classification of articles mailable as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones and other conditions of mailability under the act of congress, if the postmaster general shall find on experience "that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or shall permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the interstate commerce commission after investigation, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones or conditions, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof."

Through many years different members of the house and senate have been interested in promoting parcel post legislation. Among the men most active in securing the legislation which soon is to go into effect as law are Senator Jonathan Bourne of Oregon, Representatives David J. Lewis of Maryland and William Sulzer of New York, who has just been elected governor of that state.

RATES OF POSTAGE

Parcels weighing four ounces or less are mailable at the rate of one cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce, regardless of distance. Parcels weighing more than four ounces are mailable at the pound rate, as shown by the following table, and when mailed at this rate any fraction of a pound is considered a full pound.

APPROVES RULES FOR PARCEL POST

Postmaster General Issues Regulations Governing System.

WHAT MAY BE SENT BY MAIL

Gives American People Opportunity to Send Farm and Factory Products by Mail From and to Any Point in United States.

Postmaster General Hitchcock has just approved the regulations which cover in detail the articles which may or may not be sent by parcel post. These regulations are now being turned off at the government printing office on a "rush order" and they will be distributed as rapidly as possible.

The rules as to what can be sent and what cannot be sent and the instructions for the preparation of mailable articles with other "official advice" are given here as they have just been prepared by the postoffice department in Washington.

The minimum rate will be five cents for the first pound and three cents for each additional pound to any point not exceeding fifty miles from the office of mailing; the local rate, which is five cents for the first pound and one cent for additional pound, applies to all parcels the delivery of which does not involve their transportation on railway lines. The rates increase for each successive one of the eight zones, the maximum rate being twelve cents a pound, which will carry a parcel across the continent or to any of our possessions. Parcels will be limited to eleven pounds in weight and six feet in length and girth combined.

Mailable Perishable Articles.

Butter, lard and perishable articles such as fish, fresh meats, dressed fowls, vegetables, fruits, berries and articles of a similar nature that decay quickly, when so packed or wrapped as to prevent damage to other mail matter, will be accepted for local delivery either at the office of mailing or on any rural route starting therefrom When inclosed in an inner cover and a strong outer cover of wood, metal, heavy corrugated pasteboard or other suitable material and wrapped so that nothing can escape from the package, they will be accepted for mailing to any offices within the first zone or within a radius of 50 miles. Butter, lard, or any greasy or oily substance intended for delivery at offices beyond the first zone must be suitably packed. Vegetables and fruit that do not decay quickly will be accepted for mailing to any zone if packed so as to prevent damage to other mail matter. Eggs will be accepted for local delivery when securely packed in a basket or other container. Eggs will be accepted for mailing regardless of distance when each egg is wrapped separately and packed in a container.

There is no restriction on salted, dried, smoked or cured meats and other meat products, but fresh meat in any form will be transported only within the first zone.

Parcels containing perishable articles must be marked "PERISHABLE," and articles likely to spoil within the time reasonably required for transportation and delivery will not be accepted for mailing.

Manufactured Articles.

Manufacturers or dealers intending to transmit articles in considerable quantities are asked to submit to the postmaster for approval a specimen parcel showing the manner of packing.

When sharp pointed instruments are offered for mailing, the points must be capped or encased. Blades must be bound so that they will remain attached to each other or within their handles or sockets.

In Powders, pepper, snuff, or other similar powders not explosive, or any similar pulverized dry substance, not poisonous, may be sent when inclosed in cases made of metal, wood or other material to render impossible the escape of any of the contents. Flour of all kinds must be put up in such manner as to prevent the package breaking or the flour being scattered in the mails.

Queen Bees and Nursery Stock.

Queen bees, live insects, and dried reptiles may be mailed in accordance with the regulations that now apply to other classes of mail.

Seeds of fruit, nursery stock, and all other plant products for preparation may be mailed under the same conditions.

Confectionery and Soap.

Candies, confectionery, yeast cakes, soap in hard cakes, etc., must be inclosed in boxes and so wrapped as to prevent injury to other mail matter.

Sealed original packages of proprietary articles, such as soaps, tobacco, pills, tablets, etc., put up in fixed quantities by the manufacturer, and not in themselves unmailable, will be accepted for mailing when properly wrapped.

Millinery.

Fragile articles, such as millinery, toys, musical instruments, etc., and articles consisting wholly or in part of glass, or contained in glass, must be securely packed and the parcel stamped or labeled "FRAGILE."

Unmailable Matter.

The following matter is declared unmailable by law:

Matter manifestly obscene, lewd, or lascivious; articles intended for preventing conception; articles intended for indecent or immoral purposes; all matter otherwise mailable by law, the outside cover or wrapper of which bears and delineation or language of a libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, or threatening character. All such matter, when deposited in a post office or found in the mails, shall be withdrawn and sent to the divisions of dead letters.

Intoxicants, Poisons and Inflammable Materials.

Spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind; poisons of every kind, and articles and compositions containing poison, ponsonous animals, insects and reptiles; explosives of every kind; inflammable materials (which are held to include matches, kerosene oil, gasoline, naphtha, benzine, turpentine, denatured alcohol, etc.), infernal machines, and mechanical, chemical or other devices or compositions which may ignite or explode; disease germs or scabs, and other natural or artificial articles, compositions or materials of whatever kind which may kill, or in any wise injure another or damage the mail or other property.

Pistols, Animals and Birds.

Pistols or revolvers, whether in detached parts or otherwise; live or dead (and not stuffed) animals, birds, or poultry, except as elsewhere provided; raw hides or pelts, guano, or any article having a bad odor will not be admitted to the mails.

Treatment of Undeliverable Parcels.

Perishable matter will be delivered as promptly as possible, but if such matter can not be delivered and becomes offensive and injurious to health, postmasters may destroy it, or the injurious or offensive portion thereof.

Parcels Improperly Packed.

Postmasters will refuse to receive for mailing parcels not properly indorsed or packed for safe shipment.

When parcels on which the postage is wholly unpaid or insufficiently prepaid is deposited for local delivery and the sender is unknown, notice of detention need not be sent but such matter will be delivered and the deficient postage collected from the addressee by the carrier. If the addressee refuses to pay the postage the matter will be sent to the Division of Dead Letters.

Insurance on Parcels.

A mailable parcel on which the postage is fully prepaid may be insured against loss in an amount equivalent to its actual value, but not to exceed $50, on payment of a fee of ten cents in parcel post stamps, such stamps to be affixed.

Forwarding of Parcels.

Parcels may be remailed or forwarded on the payment of additional postage at the rate which would be chargeable if they were originally mailed at the forwarding office, in which case the necessary stamps will be affixed by the forwarding postmaster. Payment must be made every time the parcel is forwarded.

Preparation for Mailing.

Parcels must be prepared for mailing in such manner that the contents can be easily examined. A parcel will not be accepted for mailing unless it bears the name and address of the sender preceded by the word "From."

In addition to the name and address of the sender, which is required, it will be permissible to write or print on the covering of a parcel, or on a tag or label attached to it, the occupation of the sender, and to indicate in a small space by means of marks, letters, numbers, names or other brief description, the character of the parcel, but ample space must be left on the address side for the full address in legible characters and for the necessary postage stamps. Inscriptions such as "Merry Christmas," "Please do not open until Christmas," "Happy New Year," "With best wishes," and the like, may be placed on the covering of the parcel in such manner as not to interfere with the address.

Distinctive Stamps.

The law requires that the postage on all matter must be prepaid by distinctive parcel post stamps affixed. Postmasters cannot receive for mailing parcels that do not bear such stamps.

Parcel post stamps are not valid for the payment of postage on matter of the first, second, and third classes, and when used for that purpose, the matter to which they are affixed shall be treated as "Held for postage."

Maps and Guides.

Parcel post maps, with accompanying guides, are to be sold to the public at their cost, 75 cents, through the chief clerk of the post office department. In ordering maps care should be taken to specify the post office from which the postage rates are to be determined.

PEOPLE MOST TALKED ABOUT

ONE OF UNCLE SAM'S MANY DETECTIVES

You haven't heard, have you, that in the work being done to assure you absolutely good oysters on all occasions, one of your most capable aids is a very charming young woman? She is Miss Ruth C. Greathouse, and she is a very important and busy personage just now that the oyster season is at its height.

Miss Greathouse is young—delightfully so. If one were called upon to judge by the amazingly childlike expression of her blue eyes, the freshness of her coloring, or the riot of curly locks, one might say "She's about eighteen." If one were called to make a guess by the very dignified letters of scientific degree following her name, or the importance of the work she does, one would place the figures among the years of spectacles and gray hairs.

Miss Greathouse is one of the expert scientists of the bacteriological division of the bureau of chemistry at Washington, and has done some of its most important and efficient work. Under the bacteriological division comes all the inspection of oysters and shellfish of all sorts as well as the testing of the milk supply.

The bureau of chemistry, under the food and drugs act, is able to seize and investigate only such goods as are intended for interstate commerce.

This seizing of goods that require immediate inspection makes it necessary that when this very capable and delightful girl detective for Uncle Sam starts on a seizing tour she must go prepared to make an immediate examination of the oysters. To be ready for such emergency she must carry a portable laboratory. These portable laboratories are of two sizes—the larger about the proportions of an average steamer trunk, and the smaller about the size of a good big suit case. Wherever Miss Greathouse goes about her work these "portables" go also.

"It all sounds very difficult," she said one day in speaking of her work, "but it's like a good many other things—it isn't half bad when you know more about it. Wherever it is possible, a man inspector is sent out with any young woman from the bureau of chemistry detailed on investigation work, and, of course, though we are expected to be perfectly capable of taking care of the undertaking without any assistance, the men inspectors, out of pure courtesy, take most of the disagreeable part of the work."

MRS. GROVER CLEVELAND'S FIANCE

Prof. Thomas Jess Preston of Wells college, whose engagement to Mrs. Grover Cleveland has been announced, is fifty years of age and a graduate of Princeton. After his matriculation there, he began his university studies at Columbia, which were interrupted on account of illness. At that time he gave up the idea of completing his education and went into business in which he has, in the announcement made of the engagement by his friend, President John Grier Hibben of Princeton, "made a rapid and notable success, establishing himself at the head of a prosperous manufacturing business in Newark, N. J. After securing a substantial fortune, he closed his active business career and went to Paris to study for two years at the Sorbonne." Returning to America, Professor Preston, then over forty years of age, took a special course at Princeton and at the same commencement received the degree of Litt. B. and M. A., a very unique attainment. Then he went abroad again as Fellow of the American School of Classical Study at Rome and later won the Fellowship of the Archaeological Institute of America. After taking his degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Princeton, he was called to the chair of archaeology and the history of art at Wells college. Mrs. Cleveland was graduated from Wells and she has always been interested in the studies of which Professor Preston is the exponent. Mrs. Cleveland, who was a beautiful girl and young matron, is still an extremely handsome woman. Simple and gracious, she won the hearts of all Americans during the two terms of her husband at the White House.

CITY OF LONDON'S NEW LORD MAYOR

Once a year the lord mayor of London rides through the streets of his city, the old city, in all the trappings and regalia of office. He rides in a gilded coach and behind him come the city's minor officials and merrymakers.

It was once the custom at the lord mayor's show for those in the upper windows along Fleet street enthusiastically to hurl red-hot pennies on the indignant heads of those on the streets below.

Sir Edward Burnett, the new lord mayor, comes to an office which consists largely of entertaining distinguished foreign visitors to the city. His term lasts a year. In the old days when the king needed funds he had to ride to Temple Bar and receive the permission of the lord mayor before he could enter the city. The mayor offered his huge sword, which the king touched in recognition of the mayor's rights. This part of the ceremony is even observed today.

Although much of the mediaeval character of the lord mayor's office is still retained, there is at least one adjunct to it which has disappeared, namely, the "lord mayor's fool," a personage who filled in the city an office similar to that which the court jester undertook in the royal household.

DECLARES THAT TURKEY IS PROGRESSIVE

Gabriel Bie Ravndal, of Minnesota and South Dakota, American consul general at Constantinople, and honorary president of the chamber of commerce for the Levant, has been spending several days in Washington and New York before departing for his post. He has been in the United States for his annual leave of absence.

Mr. Ravndal states that Turkey offers a fine field for American brains and money and is making rapid strides in all branches of business.

"If I were to tell you about all the changes which are taking place in the east, including Turkey," says General Ravndal, "I would probably be accused of being untruthful; and at the risk of such an accusation I want to talk briefly about a few of them.

"Fifty years ago Port Said was a small Arab encampment; now it has 50,000 inhabitants. Piraeus, the port of Athens, has grown in eighty years from a single hut to a city of 80,000. Beirut, the chief seaport of Syria, has grown to 25,000 in the same time, and many other places show an equal growth. There have been several land booms in [illegible].

"When I left Constantinople two months ago [illegible] houses by the hundreds to widen and [illegible] more sanitary."

Breaking It Gently.

"Whom have you there in tow?"

"This is Rip Van Winkle. He just woke up."

"Why guard him so carefully?"

"Well, we're letting him see the women's styles gradually, don't you know."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Personal Interest.

As far as the ordinary, every-day man is concerned one pound of personal interest will outweigh a ton of public welfare.

Why He Left.

They were discussing a play.

"The play was as dry and uninteresting as you and me standing here talking," she said.

Then she wondered why he seemed in such a hurry.

When Money Talks.

"Pa, what does it mean when you say that a man hasn't the courage of his convictions?" "That he has opinions, but isn't willing to bet money on them."—Detroit Free Press.

Just Had to Do It.

Mother, overhearing a quarrel, called her four-year-old in from the sidewalk and forbade him to go outdoors again while the other children were near.

"But I must go out there again, mamma(just for a minute!" announced the child, earnestly.

"Why must you, dear?" asked mamma.

"Because," was the fervid answer, "they hit me an' hurt me, an' I [illegible] better go out there an' [illegible]

Good for Next Edition.

Jack—Now that your engagement is broken, are you going to make Blanche send back your letters?

Harry—You bet I am. I worked hard thinking out those letters; they're worth using again.

Courage and Nerve.

Courage is the thing which enables a man to tackle a hard task with ease. Nerve is the thing which enables him to tackle it when he's scared to death.—[illegible]

Coward.

Mack—Jones is a coward. I called him a liar yesterday and he never even answered me.

Jack—What did he do?

Mack—He hung up the receiver and cut me off.

World's Meanest Man.

We have just heard of the world's meanest man. He doesn't like his wife's red hair, so he is trying, by filling her days with care, to cause it to turn white.
